Dear Mr D1914

Many thanks for attending for your recent ambulatory ECG. This demonstrated that at times, your heart went into an abnormal rhythm and indeed, an arrhythmia described as supra-ventricular tachycardia (SVT). There were 11 episodes of SVT in total during the investigation amounting to a 2% supra-ventricular burden. In between-times, you were in normal sinus rhythm with an average heart rate of 70 beats/minute.

Supra-ventricular arrhythmias are a nuisance in the first instance, and they can be managed with medications. However, I think it is reasonable to pursue specific specialist investigations and treatment options as opposed to leaving the situation as it stands currently. Therefore I have taken the liberty of referring you to my consultant colleague who specialises in cardiac arrhythmias (Dr Norman Qureshi). You should receive an appointment for his clinic and we can take things from there. In the meantime, if you have further symptoms which you are concerned about, we would be happy to see you as required.

Yours sincerely,
