Consultation Question 5:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

The reasoning for this proposal put forward in the document seems sensible. However, this is a cause for concern if there were any question of the requirement for the in-person interview being dropped at any stage in future. On occasion these small changes do initiate the erosion of a requirement altogether. It is vital for the officiant or another authorised person to meet both parties prior to the marriage, to minimise the risk of coercion.

Consultation Question 6:

seven days; or

Please expand on your answer:

With the option to extend this period if concerns arise about the validity of the application.

Consultation Question 7:

Please share your views below:

Remote interviews would have greater potential to miss certain indicators that all was not well. Many people who have now had increased experience of video-conferencing and online meetings during 2020 will attest that something is lacking in comparison to an in-person meeting, in particular the ability to "read the room" and pick up on body language. Since it would be behaviour and indicators of this kind that would initially lead to concern over issues of consent, it is wiser to retain the requirement of an in-person meeting at the outset.

Consultation Question 8:

Please share your views below:

That would depend on the degree of difference between the processes within and outside England and Wales. If the procedure of giving notice were very similar, or if it were possible to follow a specific "England and Wales" notice procedure regardless of the country in which it took place, this seems reasonable. However, it wouldn't be fair for couples to undergo a vastly different process, for example, not to be required to attend an in-person interview because the country where they are giving notice does not require it.

Consultation Question 9:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

It is right to retain the public nature of marriage by continuing publicity of the notice to marry and given the increased mobility of society nowadays, online publicity seems appropriate. The online system could be used alongside the current arrangements, to be inclusive of those who do not have access to the internet.

Consultation Question 15:

Please share your views below:

The purpose of the banns is similar to that of the notice to marry in the civil preliminaries in publicising the intended marriage. As stated in the document, publicity is valuable to the public nature of marriage and therefore it seems sensible that the banns continue to be read in other churches, especially in parishes where the couple are residing and more likely to be known.

Bringing these requirements in line with civil arrangements would be reasonable and fair.

Chapter 5: Officiants

Consultation Question 19:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 20:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Many religious venues, including small churches, rely on the presence of a registrar for the formalisation of the marriage, where they do not have an authorised person to conduct weddings themselves. If this were prevented in future the couples who wish to marry in those churches would be unable to. Since this consultation is with the aim of creating greater choice for couples, this seems counter-productive, especially if these churches and other small venues were not permitted to nominate their own officiant because of having too small a membership (cf question 25),

Consultation Question 25:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

It is not clear whether the 20 members minimum applies to a whole organisation or to individual branches. For example, there might be a specific Christian body with many member churches throughout England and Wales, some of which have fewer than 20 regular members. Would the umbrella body, with its hundreds of members, be entitled to nominate any of its ministers (regardless of congregation size), or only those ministers whose congregations exceeded 20? If the latter, this would present a disparity with the Anglican church in which an incumbent would automatically be entitled to officiant status regardless of congregation size.

Consultation Question 26:

Please share your views below:

Since public policy and morality are very subjective concepts and are subject to change over time, this regulation threatens to exclude different organisations depending on the prevailing opinion of the time. In this context, organisations which have consistently held the same opinions and purposes since their inception might suddenly find themselves ineligible to nominate officiants, when they have previously done so for some time without any problem. The question of eligibility could be reduced to a conflict between a group's core beliefs and society's current popular ideas, which could lead to discrimination and remove the option for couples to marry according to their beliefs. If certain groups are to be restricted in this way, the reasons for doing so need to be very clearly defined from the outset.

Consultation Question 27:

Please share your views below:

Considering the discussion in the consultation document this should not be necessary, provided the authorisation procedure were relatively quick, for example to cover the departure of one church leader and the appointment of a successor without disruption to the ability of the church to provide weddings.

Consultation Question 28:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 29:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

If this is an individual member of the public, there should be a body which assesses their suitability to be authorised and they should be required to complete appropriate training.

The training described in the consultation document focuses on ensuring officiants are able to fulfil the legal requirements, as opposed to any information on assessing venues and activities for their suitability as a context for forming a marriage, which should also be required. The concern is that this could become commercialised, and it would be important to ensure that independent officiants uphold the same high standards of dignity and solemnity that are currently expected of registrars and religious officiants.

Consultation Question 30:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 31:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

As in question 29, the training needs to place on the officiants a requirement to be competent in assessing venues and activities for their suitability as a wedding context. It cannot solely focus on the fulfilling legal aspects and leave them unclear on how to ensure the solemnity and dignity that marriage requires.

Consultation Question 35:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

The concepts of dignity and solemnity need to be clearly defined, so that those nominated or applying to become officiants are left in no doubt what is required of them. For example, they need to understand what expectations of behaviour they should hold for those participating in a wedding ceremony to be appropriately respectful of the marriage taking place. Section 5.194 suggests that it is merely the conduct of the officiant that must uphold dignity and solemnity, but in fact to a certain extent the officiant should be responsible for ensuring that the content does likewise. If the officiant's job is to reflect the fact that "marriage is...a serious matter" they need to convey how that ought to be recognised in the ceremony as well as in their own demeanour.

Consultation Question 36:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

In terms of the practical aspects laid out in the consultation document, it would be reasonable to issue guidance to all officiants. However, the General Register Office should recognise that some organisations, in particular religious organisations, may wish to place their own restrictions on what is deemed appropriate and dignified within the context of a wedding ceremony, or to include certain elements important to their beliefs.

Consultation Question 37:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 38:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

That really depends on the criteria applied for assessment. The notion of "fit and proper" is subjective, and differences of opinion between the General Register Office and certain religious organisations may lead to officiants being de-authorised when their nominating body still considers them an appropriate person to hold the office.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Marriage is more than a mere contract, so more should be required than merely signing the schedule. The signing of the schedule could still be considered an expression of consent for legal purposes, but making certain promises to one another publicly is at the heart of marriage so these should be retained. It is very important that marriage remain a public with the support of family and community (not simply a private arrangement). The public expression of consent, if non-verbal, would need to be in a way that is traditionally recognised by the religious body conducting the ceremony, rather than having the couple simply opting not to speak.

The removal of the requirement to express that there is no impediment to the marriage seems unnecessary. It takes very little time and there is a certain significance to having each party declaring that they are free to marry, in front of everyone present.

Consultation Question 43:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

It would be very important that officiants received adequate training in how to maintain the serious commitment of marriage, and not allow it to be trivialised or commercialised, so that when approached by the couple they could help to set suitable expectations about activities and venues that are appropriate to getting married.

Consultation Question 46:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

In the context described in the consultation document, this repeal appears reasonable. However, it would be important to clarify that this is not intended to prevent those marrying in civil ceremonies from having a subsequent blessing or celebration in a religious building, and that such events can be held before or after the legal civil ceremony takes place.

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Marriage is important for society as a whole, so the public nature of marriage should be recognised by retaining the open doors aspect of the ceremony. The public, accessible nature of a wedding is an essential safeguard against any kind of fraud, bigamy or forced marriage. If equality is sought, rather than remove this requirement, it should be applied to all weddings, with allowances made for a pre-arranged exception, for example the marriage of a terminally ill patient on a protected hospital ward or in a private home, or a marriage taking place where there is a security concern.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

There would be many benefits to broadening the range of venues where marriage is permitted to take place and this is certainly worthy of consideration. However, there are certain places in which the dignity and solemnity of marriage would not be upheld, so there should definitely be some restrictions still in place on what constitutes an appropriate location.

Please share your views below:

It is not possible to define, in such broad categories, what would be an appropriate or inappropriate venue for a wedding. For example, "in the air" could mean a treehouse, a plane or hot air balloon, or all members of the wedding party taking part in a sky-diving activity. Whereas some of these might be safe and dignified, others would definitely not be and the ability of the couple to take their decisions and commitment seriously would be called into question. Since the exchanging of certain public promises are intrinsic to marriage, it would be important that any venue where the couple could not be heard by others be deemed unsuitable for a wedding ceremony.

Consultation Question 49:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

This should very much be seen as an exception/exemption because of the couple's circumstances, rather than the norm: the public nature of a wedding is symbolised by the accessibility of the venue.

Consultation Question 50:

Yes

Other

Other

Please expand on your answer:

There are many instances in England and Wales of organisations not owning their own building and renting rooms or a whole building on certain days. It could be the case that the same building is used by a religious group and a non-religious group and in those circumstances, both ought to be entitled to use it for weddings if they so wish. This should also apply to the owners of such a building: should any difference of opinion/belief arise between the owners and the hirers, they should not be prevented from holding weddings.

It is difficult to envisage a point at which electronic security is so much improved that an electronic signature can take the place of a physical one. Marriage is so significant and so important that it would be a risk to encourage circumstances in which someone could be incorrectly recorded as married, either by error or by design, by electronic signature. Great caution should be taken with this idea.

Consultation Question 57:

Please expand on your answer:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Factors 2 and 3 are far too fundamental to the nature of marriage and must surely play a part in ensuring a marriage is legally valid? Witnesses are required to fulfil the public nature of marriage and to attest that the appropriate documents are signed. As has been discussed in previous sections, the signing of the schedule or marriage document constitutes a consent to be married (and if the proposals go ahead, could in some cases constitute the only time the couple consents throughout the ceremony) so without it the marriage cannot legally be deemed to have taken place.

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

In the case of 2, where a couple gives notice and goes through a ceremony with an officiant, it is important that a public declaration of consent was included if this eventuality did not include the signing of the schedule or document.

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

There are distinct differences between marriage and cohabitation and these ought to be reflected in marriage law. Marriage is legal and public, with specific requirements on the spouses, whereas cohabitation is a private arrangement. Statistically the two have significantly different outcomes for both the couple and any children they have. With the developments in public record-keeping, there is no longer any reason to assume a couple is legally married if they cannot provide documentary evidence.

Chapter 13: The potential impact of our proposals

Consultation Question 85:

Please share your views below:

Currently many couples choose not to get married and cite a number of reasons for not doing so including cost, inconvenience, the perceived unimportance of being married. Marriage is, however, a great benefit in many ways, both to society and to individual families, especially to children, and should be encouraged as much as possible. It is not possible to say how much these proposed changes would impact on the number of people getting married, given that many do not cite legal restrictions for their decision not to marry. So long as marriage is culturally disparaged and undermined the number of couples marrying is likely to continue to fall.

With regard to couples (or one half of a couple) who believe they are legally married when in fact they are not, this is clearly a cause for concern and women in particular should be given protection from this situation. Legislation which makes the fact of being married or unmarried clearer will undoubtedly provide some help, but it should be recognised that in spite of this, and of any legal prohibition to mislead someone into believing they are married, this will still continue. Other means of ensuring individuals can guard against falling into that situation, such as clear education on the subject, should be considered alongside this legislation. The requirement to include a comprehensive explanation of the nature and benefits of marriage in the secondary RSE curriculum is therefore of vital importance, although this element is sadly neglected in many RSE programmes.

My husband and I believed that the wedding vows are important as they stand.

Consultation Question 3:

Please share your views below:

We have not attended any weddings during the Covid pandemic.

Chapter 4: Preliminaries

Consultation Question 4:

No

Please expand on your answer:

It is important that weddings are planned and taken seriously.

Consultation Question 5:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This just might open the way to forced marriage. Teenage girls need more protection than this would give.

Consultation Question 6:

seven days; or

Please expand on your answer:

This is to give protection to young people being pushed into forced marriage.
It would also give some protection regarding fake marriages for the purposes of illegal entry into the country.

Consultation Question 7:

Please share your views below:

No. An in person interview is important in trying to prevent sham marriages or forced marriages.

Consultation Question 8:

Please share your views below:

No. Again, there needs to be more protection against forced marriages and sham marriages.

Consultation Question 9:

No

Please expand on your answer:

How could the safety of someone escaping an abusive previous marriage be assured?

This could help prevent sham marriages.

Consultation Question 17:

Please share your views below:

This could help prevent sham marriages.

Consultation Question 18:

all weddings should be preceded by civil preliminaries.

Please expand on your answer:

This would be more appropriate for weddings conducted in other religious places, such as mosques and non Anglican churches.

No

Please expand on your answer:

This is too vague.

Consultation Question 26:

Please share your views below:

This is too vague. What is unlawful or contrary to public policy or morality?

This could penalise a church which promotes traditional marriage.

Consultation Question 27:

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The prescribed words forms the foundations of the marriage vows.
There is plenty of room for other words to be used by the couple later in the ceremony.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The legal wedding ceremony reflects the seriousness of the commitment the couple are making.
There is plenty of room for personal words later.

Consultation Question 46:

No

Please expand on your answer:

My husband and I had a wedding in a register office, followed by a service of blessing in our church. Why should this be repealed?

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The open doors requirement is important, making it clear that a wedding is not just a private affair but is important to society.
Making sure weddings are open to the public also helps to protect against forced marriage and bigamy.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

How would suitable venues be guaranteed?

The current law allows weddings to take place in venues registered for the purpose, this at least gives some guidance.

Please share your views below:

As a wedding is a public occasion, these private venues should be restricted.

Consultation Question 49:

No

Please expand on your answer:

A wedding is a public ceremony.

Consultation Question 50:

Yes

Yes

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

This is just too confusing? Why would a religious ceremony not be held in a church?
Why would a non religious ceremony not be held in a civil venue?

Consultation Question 51:

No

Please expand on your answer:

There needs to be rules, and the officiant should not be able to overrule that.

Consultation Question 52:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

As stated above, there should be general rules

Consultation Question 20:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Smaller Churches may not have the expertise or objectivity or personnel needed to conduct weddings so need a registrars services.

Really detest the potential for the law allowing or in anyway encouraging all but the minimum necessary market of Independant celebrants. They have little enough bar to the standard of content they need to ensure.

Consultation Question 23:

Consultation Question 24:

No

Please expand on your answer:

There is no bar set on what that non-religious belief is. It itself could be disrespectful of marriage and so inherently devalue the what the law surrounding marriage.

Please share your views below:

Seems to be the wrong approach to define what is not okay. Should define what is okay as current law. Anything else will open up marriage to potential abuse.

Consultation Question 25:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The sincerely held belief needs to be a pro marriage one. Any proposal needs to state that clearly within it so the current proposal is inadequate.

20 members seems very small, likely dynamic, and I doubt that can be objectively determined on an ongoing basis. This would put unnecessary burden on the State.

Consultation Question 26:

Please share your views below:

Public policy and morality is dynamic so it is meaningless to even suggest it is possible to determine what it would allow. Promoting purposes that unlawful would be definable and I support that. Trouble is the result of this consultation may lead to a law so weak that what is unlawful amounts to very little and undermine the intention behind the consideration of any exclusion.

Consultation Question 27:

Please share your views below:

Yes provided memberships were in the millions and had an accountable hierarchy. I guess that applies to the Roman Catholic Church but few others organisations.

Consultation Question 28:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 29:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Object to role of independent officiants being expanded. Want state or established church to provide and police this.

Consultation Question 30:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

This must be a minimum requirement

Consultation Question 31:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

This is not enough proof. Must be some rule about criminal record and the state will need to determine that.

Consultation Question 32:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Only agree if that applies to all especially independent officiants

Consultation Question 33:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Discriminates against those nominated by organisations. Do not want marriage officiants to be anyone other than public servants as registrars and clergy are.

Consultation Question 34:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This discriminates against the religious. Rather avoid independent officiants entirely. Also existing Registrars would need to be similarly restricted.

Consultation Question 35:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Minimum requirement

Consultation Question 36:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

This need would only arise from the inherent deficiencies in the proposed changes to open up officiants of marriages so wide that the control over quality is lost. If that is to be done then I would strongly answer Yes.

Consultation Question 37:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

While minded to answer Yes, the state also has a big responsibility to not grant responsibility to organisations without sufficient resources to monitor individuals

Consultation Question 38:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Minimum requirement

Consultation Question 39:

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Needs prescribed words so there is a common understanding of what marriage means.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This is so vague as to be meaningless. Under this there could merely be the signing of a piece of paper.

Consultation Question 44:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Needs a common core requirement in wording and if someone wants a type of wedding it must follow their agreed form otherwise it is not by definition 'that type of wedding'.

Consultation Question 45:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Should be limited to prescribed single faith although not denomination.

Please share your views below:

Any content from a recognised faith groups authorised service.

Consultation Question 46:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Seems an entirely unnecessary limitation of current freedom.

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

We are not a secret society and this just feeds the commercialisation of weddings. That weddings are public occasions is one of the key safeguards that they are carried out properly and with due respect. This is the most disturbing proposal in this consultation and looks to be a recipe for enabling abuse.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Very stupid idea and could limit the ability of the community to have access. Places themselves need to be fit for purpose in a similar way to the officiants and the wordings - giving the wedding the reverence needed. Indeed this is likely to limit the ability of some disabled people to attend which is highly offensive.

Consultation Question 86:

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

Church of England prices are low and where necessary waved. It is the other unnecessary consumerism associated with weddings that is the main problem. Adding the higher charges of independent officiants does not help the overall situation.

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

1. Good to have, 2 and 3 No benefit at all if new problems arise with such marriages

For 1. Fear that these costs will be disproportionately greater than any benefits given the proposals enable so much more unregulated behaviour be it independent officiants, unrestricted venues, and abandonment of prescribed wordings.

For 4. it will no doubt lead to an unnecessary increase in income of no benefit to wider society who will need to pick up the bill where things go wrong and to some unfortunate couples delivered a distressing and inadequate service who have to bear a disproportionate level of solicitors costs to sort out the results of poor service.

Consultation Question 20:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Many churches rely on civil registrars to register weddings, as they do not have their own authorised person. Couples who wish to marry in a religious building, such as a church, because they are both of a religious faith, might be unable to if their church did not have an authorised person. This removes the couples choice of marrying in their preferred location.

“Contrary to public policy or morality” is too subjective an assessment. Those with legal views, which happen to be currently unpopular, could be prevented from being nominating officiants. The test should focus on objective criteria, such as organisations that promote purposes outside of the law.

Consultation Question 29:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Currently, wedding officiants are either highly trained registrars or religious representatives who are likely to have strongly-held beliefs on marriage. Allowing independent officiants would open the door to those who may not place such a high value on marriage. There is also a risk that such independent officiants would seek to gain financially from conducting wedding ceremonies, which in turn undermines the seriousness of the marriage commitment.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Marriage is founded on solemn promises made between two parties. Not having such prescribed words, reduces the ceremony to a casual event which is in danger of being virtually meaningless.

Currently, due to the prescribed words, there is a consistency to the meaning of all marriages. This would be lost, without the prescribed words. There is already plenty of scope in the remainder of the ceremony, to be flexible as to what is included.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

It is far more important that a legal wedding ceremony reflects the seriousness of the commitment the couple is making than that it is personalised to the them.
Fully-tailored wedding ceremonies will encourage commercialisation.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

It is unclear what safeguards will prevent unsuitable venues being used. Venues need to be 'dignified' and 'safe', so that they do not detract from the solemn occasion of the wedding.

Consultation Question 3:

Please share your views below:

As manager [REDACTED] the unfortunate effects of the lockdown were exacerbated by the "traditional" nature of the legislation, and couples not understanding that legislation prevented us from being able to assist them with rational requests eg

Extend their Notice period ( primary legislative change prevented this)

Change their venue without redoing their notice ( primary legislative change prevented this)

Extend the Licence period for Licensed Venues ( GRO interpretation of legislation which appeared silent on this - but as they write the guidance little chance of successfully overturning this)

Chapter 4: Preliminaries

Consultation Question 4:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

This seems completely irrelevant in a modern society

Consultation Question 5:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

This could raise issues with S24 reporting of Sham marriages if the first part is remote.

A longer period between the in person interview & marriage date for foreign nationals could assist this.

Not all couples would want / be able to do this on line - If this became the most popular option there is a danger of the "in person" interview being less available. ( particularly if it cost more to provide)

Forced marriages may be less easy to prevent - Again additional safeguards needed at the in person interview.

It would be resource intensive to create our own system - this should be National and allow a link to book / request a in person interview at a location convenient for them

Consultation Question 6:

another period of time.

Please expand on your answer:

Seven working days as a absolute minimum. The schedule needs to be issued and sent to officiant in good time.

This may be insufficient time if a S24/ forced marriage issue is raised for a proper investigation

Consultation Question 7:

Please share your views below:

NO

It would be very difficult to pick up sham/ forced in any online system. Also if we only invited people in when this was suspected this would tip couples off that we have suspicions and could cause Registrars to be placed in a very difficult/ dangerous position

Consultation Question 8:

Please share your views below:

Yes - for the initial first part on line system.

Consultation Question 9:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Possibly - Provided less info was displayed - Personal info on line could lead to data protection issues and ID fraud, as well as unwelcome marketing information.

Objections to marriage have virtually never been as result of this public display, but come when families object due to perceived non capacity/ inheritance issues - and in these cases they know, they never come to our head office & notice the display .
This was when society was locally based. I cannot see any reason why this information should be publicly displayed

Consultation Question 10:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Its a reasonable time - However it would be helpful to build in the ability to extend this if for example there was a future pandemic which meant many notices went out of time for no good reason.

Consultation Question 11:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

- 1) Yes - provided that groups like County Council Registrars can be recorded as a generic group not as individuals
- 2) Yes - but may be a fee & cut off point when it can no longer be amended prior to the Marriage/ CP for logistical reasons

Consultation Question 12:

Consultation Question 18:

all weddings should be preceded by civil preliminaries.

Please expand on your answer:

To create an even playing field Universal Civil Preliminaries should apply - better control of sham/ Forced/ safeguarding etc.

Chapter 5: Officiants

Consultation Question 19:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

There would obviously have to be provision for full cost recovery (to be charged for the attendance of the officiant, even if they are not leading the ceremony, and the officiant should be properly trained and the training must be refreshed regularly and that officiant should face sanctions for non-compliance with regulations.

If officiants are permitted to make a profit, then all officiants should be permitted to make a profit, there must be a level playing field.

Consultation Question 20:

No

Please expand on your answer:

If civil preliminaries are universal and any religious or non religious marriage is legally recognised then a registrar should be able to officiate at any wedding regardless of who is leading the ceremony.

Consultation Question 21:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

It would be reasonable to have that as the legal necessity, however registration services should be able to insist on sending two members of staff under certain circumstances - ie large numbers, unusual venue, out of hours, couple unknown to service ( ie gave notice out of county)

Consultation Question 30:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

But If UCP in place then a civil officiant should attend all ceremonies regardless of who leads the ceremony

Consultation Question 31:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes - If UCP in place then a civil officiant should attend all ceremonies regardless of who leads the ceremony

Consultation Question 32:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Yes - If UCP in place then a civil officiant should attend all ceremonies regardless of who leads the ceremony.
If any are allowed to make profits then they all should be

Consultation Question 33:

No

Please expand on your answer:

If enabled independent officiants should be subject to universal full cost recovery fee if that is applicable to other officiants.

ALL officiants should either be full cost recovery or able to make profits - SAME rules should apply to all officiants.

If full cost recovery this should be defined & it MUST be clear about VAT status of this fee

Consultation Question 34:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Not sure, however if UCP in place, then a civil officiant would be in attendance regardless of who led, so this would not be an issue

Consultation Question 35:

THE LA should act, but if they fail to act the GRO should have overall ability to remove people.

Consultation Question 39:

No

Please expand on your answer:

THE LA should act, but if they fail to act the GRO should have overall ability to remove people.

Consultation Question 40:

No

Please expand on your answer:

There should be time limited membership fee ( to cover costs) subject to renewal and any applicable regulations ( ie Public liability insurance) as with other public bodies, and an automatic deregistration if inadequate CPD is undertaken .

This will help keep the list up to date and cleansed ( ie remove deceased / people that have not worked for many years but forgotten to withdraw)

Consultation Question 41:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

This should apply to all officiants.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

1) - no maintain status quo if able, parties should express oral consent, and confirm no impediment

2) Yes - provided that the expression of consent & confirmation of no impediment is a universal requirement that makes any marriage ceremony legally recognisable

3) No - they should have done this orally as well - see above

4) The marriage should be formed when the final signature entered on the schedule after oral statements.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The form and ceremony should be chosen by the parties but the basic legal requirement of oral consent & no impediment should be universal

Consultation Question 44:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

The form and ceremony should be chosen by the parties and the religious group concerned but the basic legal requirement of oral consent & no impediment should be universal, so a marriage is recognisable.

Consultation Question 45:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

The legal parts should be secular, however embellishments such as music and readings with religious content - that do not have legal standing - should be permitted.

Please share your views below:

I don't think specific examples other than above need to be spelled out .

The only things that should not be permitted would be things that did not comply with equality and diversity rules

Consultation Question 46:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Anyone should be able to celebrate in any way they choose after a legal marriage, but in all cases it should be clear that such a celebration is not a legal marriage.

Consultation Question 47:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

any rules need to be consistent across all weddings.
Objections should be lodged at the notice stage or after

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes - however all venues/ locations should have some sort of a license ( which may be very temporary) to establish permission of owner, a Responsible person being present, appropriate insurance & risk assessments

These licences should attract full cost recovery

Please share your views below:

No locations should be automatically disqualified, however some checks and balances would be needed

Please expand on your answer:

A dynamic risk assessment should be carried out on the day by the officiant, however the location should be preapproved/ licensed in some way to include risk assessments ( see Q48)

Other

Please expand on your answer:

This should be covered by a light touch licensing / preapproval system ( see Q48)

Consultation Question 53:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

This would be covered if the LA preapproved/ Licensed either for a series of weddings or for one offs where required.

Chapter 8: Registration

Consultation Question 54:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

as long as before signed

Consultation Question 55:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

As long marriage is in Wales.

Consultation Question 56:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

as long as

Accurate & representative signature can be recorded

There is a contingency in place if the electronic system fails ( many venues are rural with poor internet reception)

The officiant is responsible for back capture in the event of IT failure.

Chapter 10: Validity and offences

Consultation Question 57:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

- 1) yes
- 2) yes
- 3) No The marriage should be void if the officiant is not authorised regardless of knowledge of couple
- 4) No The marriage should be void if the opt in has not been given regardless of the knowledge of couple
- 1)

Other

Please expand on your answer:

- 1) retain current arrangement - typographical mistakes should not render marriage void, but a significant error which could call into question the identity of the party should render it void.
- 2) Yes - Must be signed by all present including witnesses to be valid
- 3) Yes - As above

Consultation Question 58:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

- 1a , 1 b I or ii should be enough individually to make marriage non qualifying.

Consultation Question 59:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

All legal processes should have been fulfilled for this presumption, however couple couple have co-habited should be irrelevant

Yes

Consultation Question 60:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

No reason for this time limit

Consultation Question 61:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes to both - Absolutely

Chapter 11: Special types of wedding

Consultation Question 62:

Please share your views below:

Yes -

The statutory fees for these services are nowhere near the cost of providing them and neither are they in line with each other . These fees should be regularly reviewed so as to represent full cost recovery.

The doctors letter should be more specific so as to prevent people being signed off as on their death bed but still able to attend other appointments

It is completely inappropriate for wider council tax benefits to subsidise these events for customers who can afford to pay the standard fees just because they are ill.

It is often the case that people only choose to do this to avoid inheritance tax whilst having enjoyed some benefits due to not being married.

Consultation Question 63:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Fees should represent full cost recovery if a home visit is necessary.

Consultation Question 64:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

It would be far more efficient for the Local authority, rather than GRO should have the ability to reduce the waiting period, subject to confirmation by the doctor and this should include the ability to take notice at home or in a clinical setting for the terminally ill patient ( at cost recovery rates)

Consultation Question 65:

No

Please expand on your answer:

These should be quite short - 28 days more than sufficient, and the ceremony should take place ASAP. If there is a year permitted there is no need for couples to seek a reduction in the waiting period. If it expires they must begin & pay) again.

Couples can choose to wait, denying the seriousness of an illness until it is actually too late for the sick party to understand what is going on An expiry date would focus their mind.

Consultation Question 66:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes as there is no particular urgency in these cases so the 12 month validity should remain so as to be consistent with all other civil marriages

Consultation Question 67:

Not Answered

Please expand on your answer:

1. yes
2. No - a two part mainly remote could work well but an in person part of the process is still needed to check for safeguarding/ Sham/ Forced
3. no
- 4 No

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

No

Please expand on your answer:

All people are at risk of death during pandemics.

Consultation Question 68:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

That would work ok, providing there was very clear advice regarding technicalities of the registration district they are in when on the borders between Scotland and England.

Consultation Question 69:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

It would be sensible if the port of choice was the port of registration of the vessel

Consultation Question 70:

Consultation Question 74:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Electronic copies should be within 7 days, and the hard copy ASAP.

The marriage could then be registered on receipt of the electronic copy but certificates not issued until the hard copy has been received

Chapter 12: Fees

Consultation Question 75:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Full cost recovery and regularly reviewed

Consultation Question 76:

(1) the same fee as other cases in which the registration officer must travel to the person giving notice, set nationally on a cost-recovery basis; or

Please expand on your answer:

1) It is not appropriate or fair for the wider council tax payers to substantially subsidise the marriage of a customer who could potentially be able to pay the same fee for getting married just because they are terminally ill particularly as most have known of the illness for a long period and could have married in the normal way. Many are seeking to avoid inheritance tax by making a last minute decision to get married, thus avoiding a tax contribution.

Consultation Question 77:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The fee should be set at district level at full cost recovery

Consultation Question 78:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 79:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

If it reflected a full "average cost" a statutory fee is easier and fair to all. Local Registration services would not then be under pressure to raise fees.

Consultation Question 80:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

The fee should be set at full cost recovery set by the LA. Full cost recovery should include all the costs for the local authority work in relation to ceremonies, including on costs and non direct costs and it should not be just based on the registrars hourly rate

If it reflected a full "average cost" a statutory fee is easier and fairer to all. Local Registration services would not then be under pressure to raise fees. It would also mean VAT not applicable which raises the cost to couples.

If it was a low Stat fee, the LA will end up officiating with a celebrant ( who is permitted to charge far more) doing the ceremony and making a big profit leaving the LA to cope with all the legal parts for a minimal fee.

Consultation Question 81:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Fees for discretionary services should be dictated by the market place alone and should not be regulated nor related to cost recovery. The income stream can significantly reduce the financial burden on the wider Council Tax payer and allow local registration services to better self fund whilst supporting the free statutory provision of birth & death Registrations.

Consultation Question 82:

No

Please expand on your answer:

I do not agree that this should be a set fee for any wedding UNLESS full cost recovery and regularly reviewed.

Consultation Question 83:

Not Answered

Please expand on your answer:

It should be set at a level for full cost recovery. The vast majority of RGL cases are for couples who are seeking to avoid the payment of inheritance tax upon the death of one of the parties. Most have known of the illness for a long time and have had ample opportunity to commit to their partner if they so wish.

Consultation Question 84:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

If authorised officiants can operate anywhere within E&W then the RG should set fees nationally on a full cost recovery basis

Alternatively if Authorised officiants can only operate in the district where they are registered then the LA should set fees on full cost recovery basis.

Any fees in either case should include the cost of verifying qualifications are valid and CPD up to date.

Chapter 13: The potential impact of our proposals

Consultation Question 85:

Please share your views below:

- 1) No
- 2) NO

The proposals will increase choice but no evidence or anecdotal feedback to suggest couples are foregoing getting married because of current legal restrictions. Deregulation of marriages is therefore unlikely to lead to an increase in the number of marriages taking place ( did it in Scotland / elsewhere?)

Consultation Question 86:

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

- 1) these marriages are already subsidised by the income from higher cost weddings as they are set far to low to recover costs
- 2) These fees are a relatively small amount compared to the total cost of getting married. Comparison with celebrants who only perform a non statutory ceremony with no legal implications show the legal offering as usually cheaper.
- 3) this stat fee does not cover the costs of sending a registrar and should be updated for full cost recovery and regularly reviewed.
- 4) this does not make sense as they can't get married there. If couples wish to have a celebration of a marriage this is their choice and the costs incurred are not set by us. They are free to shop around
- 5) see 4 - There a range of affordable options already available for a legal marriage

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

- 1) if the registration service loses the income from external licensed premises then the cost of register office weddings in decommissioned rooms would have to rise significantly to cover costs.
- 2) there would be a lot of challenges with couples getting married in any location without any form of pre-approval
- 3) Although couples who choose to get married in any location may not have a separate legally recognised wedding the costs of getting married are unlikely to be reduced as a trained qualified officiant would have to attend to make the marriage legal and the location would have to be assessed to least once prior to the marriage to ensure it was safe & dignified. One off venues would incur additional costs for these pre-ceremony risk assessments that are required by law for any business or organisation operating legally within H&S legislation

Consultation Question 87:

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it. We would also welcome any data on the size of businesses that are affected by the law or will be impacted under our proposed reforms. :

- 1) licensed venues are already operating as public facing businesses and should already be complying with all legal obligations re planning & H&S. These are not costs of being licensed, but often being licensed forces them to comply which is a positive thing.
The costs of becoming a licensed venue is quite small spread over three years and minimal in comparison to the income generated as a result of being licensed.
- 2) these costs are covered by the couple, not the venue. We rarely turn couples away as we try and staff according to demand.

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it. We would also welcome any data on the size of businesses that are affected by the law or will be impacted under our proposed reforms. :

- 1) safety checks would still need to be in place
- 2) if less income it may result in less being employed, thus less availability
- 3.) The scheme would give more choice to couples according to wishes and beliefs
- 4) This scheme is unlikely to increase weddings long term, just the choice of where & who can marry them.

Consultation Question 88:

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

Because of the unfunded free provision of Births and deaths services and the free advice to assist couples struggling to understand the complex requirements (often those that choose a statutory cost wedding) most Local Authorities subsidise these services with income from higher cost marriages. Removing this monopoly on secular marriages will lead to a reduction in services offered, unless other funding streams are found.

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

If full cost recovery fees were charged for services currently underfunded it would be better.

We would be able to conduct weddings outdoors (growing demand for this despite it often being impractical in the British climate) and we could be far more flexible on content, which would please some couples.

Consultation Question 89:

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

- 1) none - We are required to follow the requirements of the country they are getting married in
- 2) Longer waiting period applies but this is necessary & well publicised

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

- 1) it could possibly reduce the numbers of couples who travel to get married abroad, but unlikely to be significant as England does not have the climate that most couples are looking for
- 2) There may be a slight increase in people travelling to the UK to get married from Overseas, however it seems unlikely as in our experience most overseas Nationals who choose to get married here do so as they are marrying a UK National. We really don't have the climate to attract couples to the UK as a destination wedding.

Consultation Question 90:

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

No Comment / knowledge

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

Consultation Question 91:

Please share your views below:

- 1) Our costs will increase and we will be forced to charge more for the services we do retain.
- 2) unlikely to be a significant change, just move from one business to another.
- 3) No Comment
- 4) No comment
- 5) Costs are likely to increase - Celebrants charge more for a non statutory service already - so if they have to do more are likely to charge more if unregulated - But if they can't make a profit then they won't operate.

Consultation Question 23:

No

Please expand on your answer:

For non religious celebrants not all are members of an organisation.

Eg I am a humanist and celebrant, formerly an accredited celebrant to Humanists UK, but left this as people wanting ceremonies with a little nod to faith couldn't be accommodated.

So now as an independent celebrant, I can create ceremonies that fit the client, without being a member of any body.

The important issue is that the celebrant is QUALIFIED by a recognised trainer eg humanists UK accreditation OR civil ceremonies level 3 diploma.

Celebrant organisations vary in entry requirements - some are stringent, others will let anyone in! The risk is that untrained persons will be allowed to conduct legal weddings. So the focus should be qualification specifically in wedding celebrancy.

Consultation Question 24:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The key is independent celebrancy not JUST recognising humanist celebrants.

Not all humanist celebrants are members of humanists UK.

Weddings don't fit neatly into religious versus secular.

The key is QUALIFIED independent celebrant, perhaps recognised with done initials to indicate qualified wedding celebrant (Humanist) or QWC (Independent)

Please share your views below:

Again, focus shouldn't be about organisations but celebrant QUALIFICATION (level 3 diploma, studied in person, not online )

Non recognised groups not permitted to be recognised should include cults/new religious movements.

Consultation Question 25:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This excludes independent celebrants not tied to a celebrant association.

Yes recognise groups like humanists UK but also include qualified independent celebrants.

Consultation Question 27:

Please share your views below:

No, only properly trained individuals lest the ceremony be substandard

Consultation Question 28:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes only listed celebrants should be able to officiate.

For non religious ones these MUST hold a proper qualification to be considered in the register - whether from humanists UK or civil ceremonies.

Untrained individuals (that are not clergy) should not be able to apply.

Consultation Question 29:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes! Absolutely.

But not people simply calling themselves celebrants, or who have taken a short cut such as buying an online certificate/ordination.

These must be properly trained and qualified to level 3 diploma at least go through their competency.

Consultation Question 30:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

This can be evidenced by qualification/certification as it will be assessed in training.

Consultation Question 31:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Absolutely both full celebrant training in weddings that is certified And mandatory training in legal aspects to meet registrar general requirements

Consultation Question 32:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Many many hours go into crafting a bespoke ceremony, and few celebrants make a full time living.

Instead, make it compulsory to publish fees.

Consultation Question 34:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Have clear designations that a person is:

Consultation Question 3:

Please share your views below:

I have no experience of weddings during Covid 19

Chapter 4: Preliminaries

Consultation Question 4:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

If the person has come from abroad to get married, having to wait an extra 7 days is an unnecessary expense.

Consultation Question 5:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Being in the public domain before the interview would help to flag up any objections that the registrar may want to look into more closely.

Consultation Question 6:

another period of time.

Please expand on your answer:

I believe it should be instant providing that the information has been in the public domain for a month beforehand.

While marriage has serious implications and the proposal should be in the public domain long enough for people to object, if someone has traveled from abroad to be married, having to wait days can be expensive.

Consultation Question 7:

Please share your views below:

Interviews should always be in person, and with an individual by themselves to minimise the risk of sham or forced marriages.

Consultation Question 8:

Please share your views below:

Yes absolutely as long as there is an interview at a later date before the marriage.

Consultation Question 9:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

They should be always published online to help minimise illegal marriages, and the individuals must be protected from any risk of harm if there is a known risk.

Consultation Question 10:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Those getting married often wish to make arrangements that involve other family members and may need a lot of time to organise, so 12 months seems fair.

Consultation Question 11:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Having an officiant and substitute officiant published on the schedule would also help to flag up any objections if those persons are associated with illegal marriages.

Consultation Question 12:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

It seems wise to allow for such events.

Please share your views below:

Yes, such as a disagreement between the officiant and the couple on, say, the wording of the ceremony.

Consultation Question 13:

No

Please expand on your answer:

We are one United Kingdom and national divisions should not exist unless absolutely necessary, no matter what denomination of church the marriage is being held in.

Consultation Question 14:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

No knowledge of the existing rule so unable to comment.

Consultation Question 15:

Please share your views below:

The banns should be published in the same way as any wedding; no different rules should apply to the Anglican church.

Consultation Question 16:

Please share your views below:

No, the clergy shouldn't be given any more power than any other officiant at a wedding.

Consultation Question 17:

Please share your views below:

Both of the couple should declare individually with the registrar that there is no impediment, nothing to do with the Anglican Church.

Consultation Question 18:

all weddings should be preceded by civil preliminaries.

Please expand on your answer:

To treat people getting married in the Anglican Church differently to those not, seems archaic and discriminatory.

Chapter 5: Officiants

Consultation Question 19:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

This seems a sensible measure to reduce the risk of forced or otherwise illegal marriage.

Consultation Question 20:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes because people having church or other weddings may not want the registrar to officiate as it may interfere with their traditions.

Consultation Question 21:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

1 registrar is less expensive than 2.

Consultation Question 22:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

If Clerks in 1 church are recognised as officiant, then it would only be fair for clerks in all places where marriage could take place to be recognised as officiant, which isn't an issue as long as a registrar can ensure that the ceremony is carried out according to law.

Consultation Question 23:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

All wedding venues should be treated equally as long as the wedding is carried out according to law, and treated with the solemnity that befits the consequences of entering into marriage.

Consultation Question 24:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Anyone should be able to officiate at a wedding if they are qualified under law and a registrar is present to sign that the wedding was carried out properly.

Please share your views below:

Such organisations should not be treated any differently to anyone else as long as they do not promote any practice that is contrary to the law of the land.

Consultation Question 25:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

I see no reason why not as long as the wedding is judged to be legally binding by the registrar.

Consultation Question 26:

Please share your views below:

The law should expressly exclude organisations and individuals from officiating at weddings if they promote practices that are at odds with the rest of the law.

If the practices are not unlawful but are not regarded as in line with the majority's beliefs, then government should be careful not to ban such an organization or person officiating at a wedding, because that may be discriminatory towards a minority.

Consultation Question 27:

Please share your views below:

Both the organisation and the nominated official should be deemed suitable to officiate at a serious legally binding ceremony e.g. a wedding, by a registrar.

This is because, if both organisation and individual are vetted, it reduces risk of illegal marriages taking place.

Consultation Question 28:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Because, like publishing proposed marriages (banns), publishing a list of officiants helps to flag up objections, and so reduces the risk of illegal marriages.

Consultation Question 29:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

I see no reason why not, as long as a registrar is present at a wedding to witness that it has been carried out legally.

Consultation Question 30:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Yes they should ensure that they nominate fit and proper persons but they should not be solely responsible; a registrar should also bear some responsibility in order to reduce the risk of unfit or improper persons being allowed to officiate.

Consultation Question 31:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

This ensures that the person qualifying as an officiant continues to be a fit and proper person for that office, over passing years.

Consultation Question 32:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

I see no reason to forbid making a profit out of officiating at a wedding, as long as: a) the registrar can witness that the wedding was carried out according to the law and
b) the wedding is not at odds with the officiant's beliefs and
c) the couple getting married want that person to officiate at their wedding.

Consultation Question 33:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

An officiant must declare any conflict of interest but this should not stop them officiating if the couple are happy for them to proceed.
An officiant should be able to charge what they like as long as the couple can choose whoever they like to officiate, and there is no collusion over pricing between officiants.

Consultation Question 34:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

I see no need to legislate on this point; organisations should be free to choose who they nominate to officiate, as long as they are deemed fit and proper by a registrar.

Consultation Question 35:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes, marriage has legally and morally binding consequences and the officiant should uphold the dignity and solemnity of marriage throughout the marriage ceremony; a registrar should be able to witness that the dignity and solemnity of marriage has been upheld throughout the legal part of the ceremony at least.

Consultation Question 36:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

This establishes a level playing field for the officiating of marriage, and almost certainly will reduce any pressures on the registrar and officiant to compromise on the solemnity and binding nature of the marriage ceremony.

Consultation Question 37:

No

Please expand on your answer:

While an organizations should have the responsibility to nominate officiants and a duty of care to insure they are fit and proper, the registrar should also be responsible to vet the officiant according to criteria of background checks.

Consultation Question 38:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

This seems to be a further measure to maintain the solemnity and dignity of the marriage ceremony by holding officiants and organisations accountable, which can only be a good thing with the legal and moral obligations that come with marriage.

Consultation Question 39:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

This seems to be a further measure to maintain the solemnity and dignity of the marriage ceremony by holding officiants and organisations accountable, which can only be a good thing with the legal and moral obligations that come with marriage.

Consultation Question 40:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Yes providing the ceremonies where they officiate are monitored.

Consultation Question 41:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

They should regularly attend classes and be tested to make sure they are up to date with current legislation but that should be reasonably affordable in relation to the number of weddings they officiate at and their income resulting from their services.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

The proposal covers various points and so cannot be answered simply 'yes' or 'no';

Proposal 1 - There should be checks beforehand to make sure there is both mutual consent and no legal impediment, but the point of the ceremony is to make vows in the presence of witnesses and solemnise the marriage, so both should continue to be included.

Proposal 2 Agreed as long as the statement is clear in law.

Proposal 3 - signing of the spoken marriage vows should continue to complete the legal document.

Proposal 4 - I would say the point of marriage is once both the legal text is signed and the vows have been spoken.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

While the details of the ceremony should be up to the couple getting married, the wording of the vows should include a clear unambiguous statement of commital to marriage as held under the law of the land.

Consultation Question 44:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

As long as the vows include a clear unambiguous statement of commital to marriage as held under the law of the land.

Consultation Question 45:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Anyone should be free to practise religious belief at a marriage as long as it doesn't harm someone else and the solemnity of the legal vows are preserved.

Please share your views below:

Religious content should not be made specific as long as the legal vows are taken in solemnity.

Consultation Question 46:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Religious freedom of expression is a hard fought for freedom in the UK and this provision must not be repealed.

Consultation Question 47:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

The couple getting married should be able to choose who attends the marriage, with the possible exception of the registrar, to make sure the wedding is legal.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The legal vows should be made in a registered hall, office or place of worship that duly reflects the solemnity of marriage.
The non-legal part of the ceremony/celebrations could be held where people choose providing there is no harm to the environment in which it is held.

Please share your views below:

The legal vows should be made in a registered hall, office or place of worship that duly reflects the solemnity of marriage.
The non-legal part of the ceremony/celebrations could be held where people choose providing there is no harm to the environment in which it is held.

Consultation Question 49:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

As long as the legal vows are made in a registered hall, office or place of worship that duly reflects the solemnity of marriage then there is no reason why it should be a place that is usually available to the public.

Consultation Question 50:

No

No

No

Please expand on your answer:

As long as the owners or trustees of the venue are happy for the marriage to be solemnised at that venue, then there should be no objections.

Consultation Question 51:

No

Please expand on your answer:

It should be checked by a registrar first to make sure it befits the nature of the legal ceremony.

Consultation Question 52:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

However, the registrar must also be content that it is dignified for a legal ceremony.

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes this will help them work with the same code of conduct that should be insisted upon by a registrar.

Consultation Question 53:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Any wedding venue should have pre-registered approval to help maintain the solemnity of marriage; it shouldn't be optional. Both Officiant and Registrar should approve the location for it to be registered as a wedding venue. This should be reviewed if there are changes to the appearance of the venue.

Please share your views below:

Both Officiant and Registrar should approve the location for it to be registered as a wedding venue. This should be reviewed if there are any changes to the appearance of the wedding venue.

Chapter 8: Registration

Consultation Question 54:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

These are basic details which help in maintaining ancestry records.

Consultation Question 55:

No

Please expand on your answer:

It would seem sensible to register an English version as it is a much more universally known language.

Consultation Question 56:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Apart from security, being able to register a marriage electronically gives another option that may prove more convenient.

Chapter 10: Validity and offences

Consultation Question 57:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

No issues with any of these proposals.

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Part 1 - a minor mistake in the schedule may not be of any great consequence so should not render a marriage void.

Parts 2 and 3 - marriage is a serious undertaking with legal consequences; absence of witnesses or signatures to the document should render a marriage void.

Consultation Question 58:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Marriage is a serious undertaking with legal consequences.
These processes are to ensure the validity of marriage and should not be overlooked.

Consultation Question 59:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

I'd not usually agree:
The idea of marriage is that 2 people are joined in a solemn commitment.
If they have not cohabited for any period afterwards, it raises serious questions as to the motive of the marriage; the only exception to this, I believe, is if one of the couple were very ill and later died or became incapacitated so that the couple could not cohabit after the marriage.

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

If a couple has never made the solemn legal commitment of marriage to each other, then they shouldn't be regarded by law to be married.

Consultation Question 60:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Because someone could have not dared for many years to assert their lack of consent to the marriage.

Consultation Question 61:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Because of the serious legal nature of the ceremony.

Chapter 11: Special types of wedding

Consultation Question 62:

Please share your views below:

I believe that people who are ill, housebound or dying should be free to marry if they wish to.
However, prison is a result of serious criminal activity and involves limiting a person's freedom to do as they please, including cohabiting with loved ones.
As marriage is a serious undertaking, it makes sense for a prisoner to wait until the end of a sentence to marry, unless on compassionate grounds i.e. in the case of terminal illness.

Consultation Question 63:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Although the notice period may reasonably be shortened in such cases.

Consultation Question 64:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

No issues with the proposal.

Consultation Question 65:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

No issues with the proposal

Consultation Question 66:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

No objections.

Consultation Question 67:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

These seem wise precautions to have that could make a big difference to someone's life if difficult and unusual circumstances.

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

No objections.

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

As long as there is reasonable evidence that the person is at risk of death.

Consultation Question 68:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Marriage is a serious long term legal commitment and the legal vows should be held in surroundings that reflect the dignity and solemnity of the marriage commitment.

This may be possible on board a large ship but certainly not immersed in the water itself.

Consultation Question 69:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

See previous answer.

Consultation Question 70:

Please share your views below:

As long as a ship has function rooms suitable to hold the legal ceremony in dignity and solemnity, this should be the guiding principle

Consultation Question 71:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Both details of the vessel, and details the officiant should be given, to minimise the chance of an unauthorised person acting as officiant.

Consultation Question 72:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

No objections.

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

No objections.

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Proper standards befitting the solemnity of the legal vows should be maintained at all times.

Consultation Question 73:

Please share your views below:

There may well be demand for maritime weddings and these could be either religious or non religious.

However, conservative congregation members would be more likely to favour traditional land based weddings in a local community rather than at sea.

Consultation Question 74:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The time limit should be the same for everyone but allow long enough for cruises at sea.

Chapter 12: Fees

Consultation Question 75:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Travel expenses should be paid by the taxpayer if the housebound person has a low income.

Consultation Question 76:

(2) a separate fee from other forms of giving notice, set nationally on compassionate grounds at below cost level.

Please expand on your answer:

Travel expenses incurred by the registrar in such circumstances should be funded by the taxpayer.

Consultation Question 77:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

No objections.

Consultation Question 78:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Fully support checks of this nature, and cost recovery seems a fair way to do this.

Consultation Question 79:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

No objections.

Consultation Question 80:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

This seems fair.

Consultation Question 81:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

No objections.

Consultation Question 82:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Except where the housebound person has a low income or is on benefits.

Consultation Question 83:

(2) there should be no fee.

Please expand on your answer:

Costs to be covered by taxpayer on compassionate grounds.

Consultation Question 84:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Seems fair.

Chapter 13: The potential impact of our proposals

Consultation Question 85:

Please share your views below:

Part 1 - No evidence re current law.

Part 2 - As long as the dignity of marriage is upheld as suggested in earlier answers, there should not be a massive change in the demographics. However, I believe the waiving of fees in cases of low income and / or terminal illness may increase demand for weddings a little.

Consultation Question 86:

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

I don't recall large legal costs when I got married.

I was fortunate that the officiant donated his services for the ceremony itself.

Places not currently permitted to hold legal weddings are mostly with good reason as they tend to detract from the dignity of marriage.

Obviously more exotic locations have a larger price tag.

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

A legally recognised wedding does not have to be hugely expensive.

Of course any savings that can be made without detracting from the dignity of marriage can only be a good thing.

Just re Number 1; having to meet certain criteria to get government approval is foundational to making sure a marriage is legal and dignified as befitting the nature of marriage.

I do know that people coming from overseas to marry have to be present in the country for a while beforehand, which can make it difficult for them in terms of taking holiday from work, if they intend to live overseas after marriage.

I have said more on this in earlier parts of the consultation.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

1. It shouldn't be possible for anyone to get married without being present at the wedding ceremony. Simply signing the marriage schedule is inadequate.
2. There is already a large amount of flexibility allowed in the wedding ceremony. The prescribed words are minimal and couples can add to them in all sorts of ways, but they should still be included.
3. Couples might say anything they like or nothing at all. This is a major departure from the public declarations always considered foundational to the legal marriage ceremony. and it risks undermining the solemnity of the ceremony and the lifelong commitment being made.
4. Some specific phrases should be included to show that both people freely consent to the lifetime commitment they are entering into.
• A wedding is not just about the couple. Society and the law have an interest in the public declaration being made. The couple enter into a union which is understood by society and has been legally defined for centuries. The idea that a couple should be able to completely personalise their ceremony comes from a wrong view of marriage. Marriage would become an entirely private matter and it removes marriage from the law and wider society.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

If we are to uphold the seriousness and solemnity of the marriage ceremony, we must ensure that the form and content are appropriate for such a significant event. Allowing such fantasy themes as Lord of the Rings, Alice in Wonderland, Harry Potter, James Bond, Game of Thrones, Star Wars and Beauty and the Beast, does not reflect how seriously marriage should be taken. All of these have been done in unofficial ceremonies, along with a 'Woodland Fairy themed ceremony with ponies dressed as unicorns'. It makes a mockery of what should be a serious and mature commitment in a legal covenant.
A wedding is a public declaration in which society and the state have an interest. When marriage is entered into like a science fiction game or a fairy tale, it will not be entered into in the dignity and responsible way marriage requires.

Consultation Question 46:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

there is no reason to remove this since it merely states the obvious, that a person can also add a more meaningful religious service if they have had a civil wedding.

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

It is very important that all weddings remain open and public affairs.

The "open doors" requirement helps convey the public nature of wedding declarations.

Forced marriages are still a problem in our society and the open doors requirement was introduced hundreds of years ago as a protection against such marriages .

To remove the requirement encourages the false idea that marriage is a private matter without any public significance.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Due to the seriousness and solemnity of the marriage ceremony, venues should not simply be allowed because couples think they would be 'fun', but because they are appropriate places to hold such a significant public ceremony.

There may be benefits in a wider variety of venues being allowed (for example for churches who don't own their own building), but this should not legitimise inappropriate settings.

Please share your views below:

If couples are allowed to hold their ceremonies "in the air", it means the 'safe and dignified' test doesn't seem too hard to meet. Would weddings also be allowed in Burger King and suchlike? A hot air balloon, airplane or private home is hardly open to the public, and as stated earlier, I feel the Open Door policy is important to retain.

Unofficial wedding ceremonies have taken place at a Comic Book convention with a couple dressed as comic book heroes, underwater, and particularly distastefully to the honour which should be afforded marriage; in a 'Sadism and Masochism Dungeon'. It is completely incompatible with the dignity of marriage for venues like these to host legal weddings.

Although the proposals ask for guidance from the General Register Office, the terms are not defined and stringent safeguards should be proposed. A S&M Dungeon may be considered 'safe' in technical terms but it is not an appropriate place for the solemnisation of the covenant of marriage.

Consultation Question 42:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

It is essential that the consent is made orally before witnesses and written consent is also given, in order to guard against forced marriage

Consultation Question 43:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

A wedding is not a private affair, and marriage is for the good of society, so should be celebrated as such in public. Also, by having the doors open it offers more protection for people who may be being forced into marriage by their families or traffickers against their will

Consultation Question 48:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Definitely not. There are too many examples already of many marriages taking place which are very much more to do with appearance rather than content.

I suppose if you have no idea of the depth of meaning attached to a lifelong vow, a novelty wedding where performance takes priority over substance may be the thing for you

Should be one or the other because there is an essential difference between the two

Consultation Question 51:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Not a good idea to leave something so important to the whim or personal agenda of the officiant

Consultation Question 52:

No

Please expand on your answer:

You must realise that this is open to an officiant being persuaded to go with whatever the couple have decided,

To ensure a venue is safe is easy enough, but dignified - that's a whole other matter.

I can see it becoming like 'themed funerals' which very often are tacky and far from dignified

No

Please expand on your answer:

The GRO like most Government Agencies tend to go for populism, so are likely to buy in to whatever anyone thinks is dignified, rather than having a standard to which everyone would keep.

Chapter 13: The potential impact of our proposals

Consultation Question 85:

Please share your views below:

I don't think the Law has much to do with whether people get married. It's just where we are in our society at the moment.

There is no social stigma about not being married, and it leaves people free to change partners, have multiple partners, and often leave children without parents who have committed to them and to each other, and we all know the consequences of that.

I don't know all the reasons why people generally don't want to commit to one partner, although it's fair to say many do, but, as the Irishman said, 'If you're getting the milk for free, why would you buy the cow?'

As far as the Law is concerned, if you are really serious about encouraging the benefits of marriage, you need to make the terms of commitment worth fighting for, not relaxing the rules even further, so that it means very little, especially by making divorce so easy in a mistaken attempt to appear compassionate.

You may help make savings, but the rest of the wedding industry certainly won't with the average wedding today costing between £20 - £30K. So the financial changes you make may well be minimal

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This needs a much tighter definition of what can be regarded as a valid ceremony with all the implications of wording , intentions of the couple and so on. What is given above will lead to a totally lax and varied system which is effectively removing the essential core of a marriage system which includes some of the State aspects and is seen by all to be legally defined not differing on a whim of the couple at the time. It should be understood to be and therefore shown to be a solemn ceremony with responsibilities on all participants.

Consultation Question 43:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

No a wedding is not simply what the couple might want at the time it is a formal ceremony showing the couple's intentions and saying so in public using a legal formula to help show the importance attached to marriage. The proposal is losing some essentials which are key to the whole procedure.

Open doors are an important part of protecting against illegal or suspect practices such as forced marriages and also give a wider view for the community to take part. It also assists with the safety aspect of groups in an enclosed space.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Venues should not be allowed simply because a couple might want them. The building is part of the overall ceremony and should be seen as such. If the wedding is to be considered legal then the location and other aspects should be appropriate and not simply a novel idea at the time. Appropriate must be reasonably defined and the point made that when the couple are married they can still add to their celebration in whatever (legal) way suits them.

outdoors,, on inland waters such as lakes or rivers,, in the air, and/or, in private homes.

Please share your views below:

Any location must be considered for obvious reason such as safety but unusual ones should need authorisation and even places such as private homes may be subject to restriction. Any proposed venue should be covered by normal laws and appropriate insurance and attendees must be made aware of the risks being run by attending a venue not so covered.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Times have moved on and there are special places with importance to those marrying which may not be in a building. It's about the commitment and what you are saying as participants not the location.

Please share your views below:

Exact location is not relevant its about the commitment and the pledges to each other that are important. There should not be any limits. Those with money always find a way round limits leaving those less off feeling disadvantaged by the rules. The choice of where to get married should not be made elitist by rules.

Consultation Question 49:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Just not necessary to be open to the public its about the couple getting married with an officiant.

Consultation Question 50:

No

No

No

Please expand on your answer:

No need for prohibiting things. Just be relaxed and let those getting married and the officiant decide what is best for them. The religious or non religious can allow or not as they wish. There's no need for the law to get involved.

Consultation Question 51:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes, so long as those who can be an officiant is not so restricted that there isn't a choice of officiant available thereby restricting locations. The choice of location should be a joint decision between officiant and those getting married. There should not be any need for formal approval but others. Location just needs to be agreed between couple and officiant.

Fees and charges should not be prohibitive and disadvantage those without much money from having a choice about the location of their marriage.

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

It would level things up so that money was not the deciding factor in where to get married. There should not be a necessity to have a separate legal wedding these always seem a thing to do because you have to and not important. This is antiquated legislation and no longer relevant in today's world. If the legal and personal ceremonies were not on the same date then this leads to confusion when completing documents as one tends to remember your personal ceremony date, even it wasn't the legal one.

There should just be approved officiant no need for registration officers.

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it. We would also welcome any data on the size of businesses that are affected by the law or will be impacted under our proposed reforms. :

It will be great to reduce bureaucracy by allowing independent officiants without the need for registration officers as well. Don't duplicate things and thereby increase costs. Marriage is important and should not be defined by fees and costs. Keep these to a minimum and necessary. This will allow everyone to marry without discrimination.

Objective criteria would be required to be applied in the exclusion of a nominated officiant, for example if the nominated officiant was engaged in illegal activity such as the promotion of terrorism. Subjective criteria must not be used, for example in questions of morality. Public perceptions of morality can change over time, and could result in the penalising of views currently at odds with prevailing opinion.

But "dignity" and "solemnity" have to be defined. The tone found in the introduction to the solemnization of matrimony in the 1662 Book of Common Prayer is a useful guide in this respect. Furthermore, dignity and solemnity should not be expected only of the officiants but should be a mark of the whole ceremony. The future of society is at stake if marriage is trivialized.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Marriage is a public affair, not merely a private arrangement between two individuals. Therefore, the prescribed words required of the parties declaring that they have no impediment to entering marriage must be retained in the ceremony and not relegated to the preliminaries. Moreover, the prescribed words of the solemn promises should be retained within the ceremony in order to maintain an understanding of the seriousness of the lifelong commitment into which the parties are about to be enter. Needless to say, the parties must therefore be present at the ceremony to say them.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The legal wedding ceremony must reflect the seriousness of the commitment that the couple are making to each other, that marriage is not something entered into casually, that the ceremony is not a form of entertainment. A marriage is a public declaration in which society has an interest.

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Marriage is not a private matter devoid of public significance. Society has an interest. There have historically been very sound reasons for a wedding to have public access. Public access provides protection against forced marriage.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Only appropriate venues should be permitted for weddings. This underlines the seriousness and solemnity of the occasion. A church that meets in a community centre or in a school building, not having its own building, should be allowed to hold weddings in those venues. Regarding other places, there is no definition or test of what is "dignified" and "safe" so this would be open to abuse, It would be simple for an inappropriate venue to make a mockery of marriage.

I am not convinced that independent officiants are a good idea. In my opinion some so-called ‘ceremonies’ which are currently not legally binding undermine the dignity and value of marriage. If these ‘ceremonies’ are officially endorsed I believe this would devalued the institution of marriage.

Also permitting independent officiants could turn the officiating at wedding ceremonies into a commercial enterprise.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The declaration of prescribed words articulates a strong foundation that is required for a marriage. Without them the wedding ceremony can be completely meaningless. A wholly personalised wedding ceremony without legally required wording would turn that marriage into an entirely private matter.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

I believe it is more important that a wedding ceremony underlines the seriousness of the marriage commitment rather than simply making the event 'personal' to the couple.

The current requirement helps make clear that a marriage is not a private affair, a marriage should impact the whole of society. Also, ensuring weddings are open to any member of the public is one way of protecting against abuses such as bigamy or forced marriage.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

I think in some cases the current restrictions are sometimes unhelpful since some churches worship in shared buildings and cannot currently hold weddings in these venues.

However, although the consultation states that venues should be 'dignified' and 'safe', this wording is not clearly defined and there is no indication on how these words will be tested. The law needs to ensure that the use of frivolous venues is prohibited.

Consultation Question 2:

Please share your views below:

I would have liked more input into my legally binding wedding but the current restrictions stopped this. I am a person of faith and could not choose a particular venues which was special to me and have my minister officiate. Whilst there were more venues available if I had a civil wedding there were still limits and there were more limits on the content including not being able to have music or readings with faith based content.

Consultation Question 3:

Please share your views below:

I am an Independent Celebrant. I was booked for 20 wedding celebration ceremonies between April and December 2020. 3 have been cancelled and the rest postponed. I have conducted one wedding celebration ceremony at fairly short notice. It was for a couple and two witnesses. The couple felt that the ceremony with the Registrar was so restrictive that they booked me for an outdoor ceremony in some beautiful gardens after the legal ceremony.

Chapter 4: Preliminaries

Consultation Question 4:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Couples who currently live elsewhere but with family and friends in England find the residential requirements prohibitive. Where one or both of the couple have elderly relatives who can't travel, just wish to be married "at home" or have a specific venue in mind they often end up doing the legal ceremony elsewhere. As so much can be done online now this requirement seems outdated.

Consultation Question 10:

However this year has shown that it may be appropriate to allow couples to apply for this to be extended ( possibly at no additional cost ) due to circumstances outside their control.

Consultation Question 11:

Speed will be important if an amended schedule needs to be issued in the case of illness etc.

Consultation Question 12:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Thought needs to be given as to difficulties in relation to the officiant on the day eg an accident. Could an alternative registered officiant be asked to take the ceremony on the day and the registration service informed afterwards?

Please share your views below:

It may be that an officiant has a family or domestic situation arise which is not an emergency as such but would make it preferable for the ceremony to be taken by someone else. There should be provision for a suitable substitute officiant to act.

Consultation Question 15:

Please share your views below:

There may be a situation where a building has to close temporarily for some reason so it makes sense to have alternative possibilities. The recent crisis has resulted in some churches not holding public worship in the buildings for some time. It may be sensible to allow for an online option either in a streamed service or on a church website.

Consultation Question 16:

Please share your views below:

This should be possible either by the clergy or the registrar. It makes sense for the Registration service infrastructure to be used.

Consultation Question 22:

They should also be required to ensure training.

Consultation Question 24:

Yes

There should be a list of such organisations held.

Please share your views below:

No as this would potentially be limiting and give rise to legislation. Criteria may be more helpful.

Consultation Question 25:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Define “regularly”. Do they have to show both. Some beliefs do not require corporate gatherings in this way. Will online gatherings be included as there are many more of these following this year?

Consultation Question 26:

Please share your views below:

Yes unlawful purposes or contrary to public purposes should certainly exclude an organisation. What would be the definition of “morality”?

Consultation Question 27:

Please share your views below:

When people hold the office they would need to be trained and their name should be put forward.

Consultation Question 28:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 29:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Independent officiants are very important in an updated provision.

Many couples today come from mixed backgrounds eg different faiths or of one faith and none, of no faith but related beliefs etc. They may find that no one religious or non religious group feels appropriate to them. It is important to note that many couples who do not want a religious ceremony as currently defined in the law do not define themselves as humanist either. There are couples who wish to have faith elements in a ceremony outside of a full religious ceremony for reason of culture, tradition or because they are unable to marry in church/religious venue eg same sex couples. Independent Celebrants currently conduct many wedding celebration ceremonies and it would help couples if these could be legally recognised.

Consultation Question 30:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

However they should also have to fulfil universal requirements re training etc and be registered with the Registration service.

Consultation Question 31:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

It may be possible for an organisation such as the Wedding Celebrancy Commission, which brings together key training organisations for Independent Celebrants, to carry out the mandatory training and CPD on behalf of the Registration Service.

Consultation Question 32:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

I find this a very strange concept. How would a fee be set that “did not elevate the making of profits above the expression of their beliefs”? Would this also apply to the Registration service? How would profit be defined? Would it include payment of salary to the officiant? If this system is to be simple this proposal doesn’t seem to help.

Consultation Question 33:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

However the concept of “conflict of interest” would need to be defined carefully. Individuals may work for an employer in the industry as well as independently.

Consultation Question 34:

No

Please expand on your answer:

I don’t understand why the first of these would be a requirement. The second potentially makes sense but I doubt it would be likely to happen.

Re the first. I am an independent celebrant and a person of faith. I am quite capable of leading a non religious ceremony or one for people of other and no faiths if they and I are happy with what is planned. As an independent celebrant I have also led a number of ceremonies which could be defined as religious - particularly for same sex couples or where one of a couple has a strong faith and the other is happy to have certain faith elements included for their partner whilst having a ceremony conducted under the auspices of a religious organisation would feel hypocritical. People are complex and we all have our line of what would be inappropriate for us. I have passed on enquiries about ceremonies where I haven’t felt I was right for it. Surely that is what a simplified, modern process needs - not an unnecessary restriction? This appears to reflect a narrow view of belief which isn’t one I think is prevalent today and is likely to become less so.

I am a lay preacher in my church and if they wished to nominate me as an officiant to undertake religious services for them I can see no reason why that shouldn’t happen. I know of some ministers of religion who have conducted ceremonies for couples at hotels etc after the couple have had the basic ceremony with two witnesses at the registration office. Under the new regime presumably they would be able to do the legal part. No one would be checking the content. If they work part time as a minister why should they not be able to also work part time as an independent celebrant?

I see no sense in this as a rule.

Consultation Question 35:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Clearer definition would be helpful.

Consultation Question 36:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

However this should not be unnecessarily restrictive. As an Independent Celebrant I have included elements in a ceremony which a Registrar would not necessarily be happy with.

Consultation Question 37:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

However it should be possible for the Registration service to also have the power to withdraw authorisation with a straight forward independent complaints system.

Consultation Question 45:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Though I am not sure why that differential needs to be made as it will be a legal ceremony whether it is civil or religious and who would be the arbiter of differentiating between the two? Will a religious service have a minimum amount of religious content so that it can be identifiable as a religious service rather than a civil ceremony.

The second part of this seems unnecessary.

Please share your views below:

I see no reason for this being in the law as no religious content wanted by the couple would stop the marriage being legal. However I think it should be possible to include hymns, "religious" music, Bible readings, prayers, other readings of religious significance and the use of any appropriate religious symbols.

Consultation Question 46:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

As I have stated above I think the law only needs to talk about whether a ceremony/service is legal or not and need not define religious/civil as it is a false split.

Yes

No

Please expand on your answer:

As long as the wedding is legal and the venue is safe these restrictions make no sense. Plenty of non religious people consider places like Cathedrals to be beautiful venues and many religious people would like to hold ceremony and reception in one place such as a hotel. Both religious and non religious people may wish outdoor or specialist venues that mean something to them. This would replace old restrictions with new unnecessary ones.

Chapter 13: The potential impact of our proposals

Consultation Question 85:

Please share your views below:

The current law discourages couples from getting married as there is not enough flexibility for them to have the wedding that they want. Basic wedding appointments at the Registration office are very limited and with some authorities non-existent. Venue restrictions limit couples from having their wedding where they wish (particularly in their own homes/gardens, public spaces etc such as beaches). The registration of venues also excludes some smaller venues which would not have enough weddings each year from hosting weddings. To have a unique, personal, meaningful ceremony couples often have to have the legal marriage conducted separate to their wedding celebration ceremony and reception. Couples from mixed faith backgrounds, and non-religious but not identifying as humanist are not able to have their legal wedding done as they wish, even in Scotland/N Ireland.

Consultation Question 86:

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

The availability of register office weddings is very restricted, especially for the basic weddings that couples should be entitled to under the law. Even in approved premises couples have to take the time offered which can result in them having to extend or restrict their day. The cost of marrying on approved premises is high and excludes smaller and niche venues who would not hold enough weddings for it to be worthwhile paying to be approved. The costs and other arrangements of having to have a separate legal wedding from a preferred venue are restrictive.

If Independent Celebrants became officiants it would release Registration officers to be more available for those not looking for a particularly personalised wedding. The financial benefits to couples of being able to marry anywhere would be considerable - though to many the choice would be the most important thing. Having a wider range of officiants would allow couples to have their chosen ceremony and legal requirements carried out together.

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it. We would also welcome any data on the size of businesses that are affected by the law or will be impacted under our proposed reforms. :

The costs result in higher prices and limited choice for couples as some venues can't afford to register.

The cost of a registrar at approved premises is often high and limited time slots can result in extended days for a couple (eg a couple who were only able to have 11am rather than 3pm had to feed their guests an additional time in the day). Later times can result in a day being unnecessarily restricted in what can be included.

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it. We would also welcome any data on the size of businesses that are affected by the law or will be impacted under our proposed reforms. :

This would allow smaller quirkier venues to host weddings and to go outside if the weather was good without building an unnecessary pagoda that has to be approved.

Broadening the officiants to include independent celebrants (who often only do one ceremony a day) would give couples more choice as well as releasing the pressure on Registrars.

Broadening the possibility of using any venue for religious or civil ceremonies would provide more choice for couples in venue and content.

The business opportunities for the hard hit hospitality industry would be considerable. It is likely to increase the no of couples marrying in the uk - both those that live here and those wishing to marry here.

Consultation Question 88:

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

Local authorities could focus on the legal requirements. They would also receive some revenue if a charge was made to register officiants. This would allow them to focus on what they are best at.

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

It will enable the registration service to focus on the legal aspects of their work.

Consultation Question 89:

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

Many couples travel abroad to marry because they have the choice to marry in forests, on the coast, in smaller intimate venues etc. These changes would encourage them to look to do this nearer to home - thus helping the economy.

The residency requirements are particularly difficult for those overseas residents wishing to marry here. Many couples wishing to marry in the UK because they have family here or links of some kind are more likely to do that with a greater choice of venue/officiant and lesser residency restrictions.

Consultation Question 91:

Please share your views below:

These proposals should lower costs for venues and couples.

They would also potentially expand the wedding industry which has suffered so much this year. Businesses related to the industry would benefit. There would be a cost to Celebrants of registering but this is likely to ensure that they offer good service in order to get clients and cover those costs.

Banns are an antiquated system that address a very important concern. Government should legislate to ensure a mechanism for publishing intention to marry and inviting appeals or declarations of illegality. If banns are used, it makes better sense for them to be read in the church where the engaged people live. There is a chance that people in that church will know of a legal reason that the wedding should not take place.

Marriage begins with a public commitment by both parties to one another. A wedding is not a purely private affair. It is not a dressing-up photo opportunity. It is not purely private affair for the two involved. It is a public commitment that requires others to be aware of in order for it to work. Taking away public access will allow forced marriage, bigamy and other kinds of abuse to take place.

Consultation Question 1:

Please expand on your answer:

I live and conduct weddings in Wales and unfortunately Humanist weddings are not legally recognised here.

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Oh yes. I make my couples acutely aware that there marriage is not legally recognised.

No

Please expand on your answer:

My couples usually have to go to a Register Office and have a civil wedding ceremony (albeit it a 'cheap/just sign the paper one). This is discriminatory as they have to have 2 ceremonies where one - a legally recognised humanist ceremony - should be sufficient. Couples want humanist weddings because that is their belief, and they want to put their beliefs and values into their wedding ceremony.

Consultation Question 20:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

I cannot understand the reason why you have to have a registrar at some religious marriages. This confuses the issues as to whether such religious marriages are civil marriages.

As to paragraphs 5.58-9, civil registrars should be debarred from officiating at humanist marriages, as well as religious ones.

Consultation Question 24:

No

Please expand on your answer:

I disagree with this definition. I think the law should just refer to those beliefs that are protected under Article 9 of the European Convention on Human Rights which the UK has a legal duty to.

The proposed definition does not make clear that the main purpose of the organisation must be to advance its belief system. I think the Hodkin definition of a religion is wrong in that it would admit beliefs that should be excluded. Similarly I find the use of the word "secular" confusing. Secular organisations come in all shape and sizes and not all explain "humanity's nature and relationship to the universe".

Please share your views below:

Don't think there should be a definitive list, but if the definition wording was strong and restrictive enough, it would capture the relevant non-religious groups and exclude any other groups.

Consultation Question 25:

No

Please expand on your answer:

These qualifications lend themselves to reckless exploitation and commercialisation. It would be too easy to 'get around' these rules, especially amongst groups who just want to make money out of the wedding industry and are not really motivated by their religion.

Indeed this paves the way for individuals who may not meet the required standards of any reputable organisation, or even be sufficiently trained, to join with others in a similar position to create an organisation that may operate with low standards. A higher legal barrier is required to avoid the risk of disreputable commercialisation. The sanctity of marriage is paramount.

Consultation Question 29:

No

Please expand on your answer:

If 'independant officiants' are allowed to go ahead, this would introduce private, commercial competitors with the civil registration service. Many commercial celebrants already claim to be able to perform 'humanist weddings', in spite of having received no training whatsoever. This creates risks and disappointment to couples who think they were getting a genuine 'humanist' wedding. Unless extremely tight restrictions are placed on who and who can't officiate at a legal wedding, this could soon turn into a real 'bun fight'. Only officiants who are accredited and nominated by a bona fide experienced organisation, both religious and non-religious organisations such as Humanists UK should be considered for registration by the General Register Office.

Consultation Question 30:

Humanists UK celebrants in Northern Ireland and those from the Humanist Society Scotland both operate in this way and it works. They haven't been prevented from charging a reasonable fee, reflecting the time and effort they have put into a wedding ceremony, but it does stop profiteering. However it has to be borne in mind that ceremonies vary greatly across the country in terms of costs,

This proposal is far to 'loose' in its definition. It doesnt consider the significance of the different - civil, religious, and humanist - ceremonies and why people choose the content they wish to have in their ceremonies or their motives. Ceremonies could include religious language or themes, but only if it is being included for secular reasons – for example, cultural or sentimental purposes. Such an approach would keep the ceremony secular.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Couples choose their humanist wedding location based on their personal criteria: where they first met for instance, at a place that they hold very dear to them, a place with emotional poignancy, even at the family home which is so personal. These ceremonies mean so much to the couples and the location is extremely important, it allows couples to express who they are and what makes them special.

outdoors,, on inland waters such as lakes or rivers,, in the air, and/or, in private homes.

Please share your views below:

This one is a no-brainer. Given I've already commented on how a location is chosen according to personal criteria and why the place chosen is so special for the couple, I cannot see why ANY venues should be disallowed, PROVIDED that a strong caveat is applied that wedding venues must be safe and that the dignity of marriage can be maintained. i.e. getting married whilst doing a skydive is perhaps far too risky!

Consultation Question 52:

Please expand on your answer:

Humanists UK celebrants are experienced on ensuring that wedding locations are dignified. However it is up to the owners of venues to take the responsibility to ensure their premises are safe. In more open venues, beaches and the like, the couples themselves have to take responsibility for this, although an experienced Celebrant would of course be mindful of safety aspects to be addressed.

Chapter 13: The potential impact of our proposals

Consultation Question 85:

Please share your views below:

Many couples who have had humanist weddings and who have strong humanist beliefs choose not to go to a Register Officer for a legal wedding, given the additional expense that this would entail. Others do go to the Register Office as they want a legally recognised marriage, however much it pains them to have to go through the rigmarole - and cost! - twice. I firmly believe that if the marriage laws were reformed, many more couples would wed. I am also a Funeral Celebrant and I am finding increasingly that many families I visit the 'husband and wife' were in fact not married, only 'partners'. They tell me that they want a humanist funeral as they are not religious and chose not to get married in church as this would be blasphemous, whereas a civil wedding in a Register Office would have no real meaning for them. Consequently they ended up simply 'not bothering'. I have found this in age groups from 20 to 90! So YES, I really believe that more couples will get married if the Government implement the proposals.

Consultation Question 86:

I have explained this in my answer to Question 85, but can reiterate that couples do not want, and should not be made to, pay twice by having both a humanist and civil ceremony IF they want a legally recognised wedding. It is their choice, and if they have strong values based on humanism, they should be allowed to legally marry based on those beliefs and values.

Although not directly impacting my family I am aware of a number of Christian couples who are following God's teaching of not having sex before marriage. For them the Covid-19 government prohibition on Marriages (except death bed ones) is a major issue. For couples for whom a marriage ceremony is just a public party to recognise that they are already living together as a couple, a delay is highly inconvenient, but doesn't actually stop them living together. For Christians such a prohibition on Marriage for a prolonged period places great stress on their relationship as the seek to honour their Lord and Saviour by living by the moral laws as set out in the Bible.

PLEASE CAN I ASK YOU TO RETHINK THE PROHIBITION ON MARRIAGE, and at least allow small weddings to take place, even if it is just a minister, the couple and their immediate family attending.

I don't fully understand the reference behind this question. But to me a marriage is a solemn undertaking that needs to be backed by organisations such as churches that garner respect and dignity within the community. To my mind some "pressure groups" may not fall into that category. The key for me is that the organisation respect the serious nature of the life long legal contract being entered into.

Consultation Question 26:

Please share your views below:

Sounds a good idea, but who decides what is contrary to public policy?

If say a church teaches, based on scripture, that homosexuality is a sin, and thus declines to conduct same sex weddings, does this make it contrary to public policy, and thus it will be excluded from conducting weddings, and if as you propose civil registrars cannot conduct the legal part of the wedding as part of a service is such a church, then that religious group (which I and my family count ourselves members of) would be unable to conduct weddings of our sons and daughters. (And I have a personal interest with three as yet unmarried adult children who attend such churches).

Consultation Question 27:

Please share your views below:

Sounds sensible. But who decides what an office is? It can quickly become a very woolly concept. Paid ministers of established churches (say operating for 5+ years) would be a reasonable definition. But would exclude churches with no paid staff, and those more nebulous non-religious organisations. Cast the definition too loosely and I can set up a "church" with 25 random friends and gain a licence to conduct weddings in a matter of weeks. Is this really a good idea, for such a serious legally binding contract as a marriage.

Consultation Question 29:

No

Please expand on your answer:

I know for funerals there are such independent officiants, but in that case they don't conduct any legal duties. I fear a free for all, with no checks and balances if a individual chooses to set themselves up as a wedding officiant. Ministers of religion generally have quite a bit of formal training prior to conducting even the religious parts of a wedding. Those licenced to conduct the legal part too, certainly have had a formal training by the CofE or Catholics etc.

I for one wouldn't like to see marriages cheapened with US style wedding chapels which appear to be in the business to make money, rather than guide and council couples seeking perhaps hastily or unwisely to tie the knot, and might be easier to persuade to do fake marriages of convenience, or marry couples where there is a lack of genuine free will on the part of one or both parties.

Unless it is the CoFE. As there may be a disagreement between the civil authorities and the established church as to what constitutes a fit and proper person. ## Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

I am concerned that the freedom to choose ones own words will result in a lack of seriousness, and the participants and their witnesses and friends not realising the seriousness of the vows that they are making one to another and the legal contract that they are entering into. I would like to see the set works that are currently a legally required part of a wedding be retained.

A marriage is a solemn contract, not just a chance to dress up and have a party.

Devaluing the "service" will just make a joke of the whole thing.

Allowing total freedom to choose your own way to do it will end up in a very shallow and meaningless event that is ultimately unsatisfying and will result in people getting married without every intending it to be for life even from day one.

Consultation Question 46:

Please expand on your answer:

Some people may find the registrar's ways of doing things at odds with their religious beliefs. If so they should be able to back up the civil event with a religious one.

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The couple are making vows in front of the whole community. So the whole community should be able to hear them. Yes there may be practical limits on numbers of the general public that can attend an event (such as a Royal Wedding) but the concept of the general public being able to attend is a key part of making vows and establishing stable family units for the benefit of the whole community. Making the venue exclusive and closed somehow to my mind devalues the marriage vows and makes them more akin to the promises made when joining a secret society. But I do understand that for celebrity weddings the participants may well want to control which photographers can be present etc.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

The underlying principle as far as I am concerned is that the marriage remains a solemn legally binding contract, to create a family unit to give a stable and secure place for the nurture of children and for the guarantee of equal rights to both parties.

So I would be reluctant to see flippant or inappropriate venues be used for such ceremonies, such as Casinos, betting shops, adult entertainment venues and the like. Or in fact any venue where the event becomes more about the experience than the commitment to one another.

And I know that gets hard to define, as what may be a very serious and central venue to one couple could be simply an entertaining experience to another. So a couple who's met while hot air ballooning and who are both professionals in that field, and so are their friend may find a specific balloon a really meaningful place to conduct a wedding, whereas for most that would be mainly an experience with a wedding tucked in on the side, and the focus of the days is no longer the promises they are making to each other, but the fun experience and the great photo shots.

Consultation Question 49:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

I fear the move to "secret weddings". I feel a marriage is a commitment in front of the local community. A "secret wedding" is making it an exclusive party rather than a public commitment. But I do appreciate that already not all venues are equally accessible or have equal space for the community to participate.

A Religious venue should be protected and only available to those who respect that religion. So there shouldn't be a right in law for people who don't adhere to the moral teaching of the religion to use their building.

If a religious group wishes to allow others to use its facilities that is of course up to it.

Chapter 1: Introduction

Consultation Question 1:

No

Please expand on your answer:

I married at a Pentecostal Elim church and had a fully trained registrar attend our wedding to lawfully legitimise it. Marrying under the law means my son and I had security within the marriage.

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Not applicable it was a lawful wedding.

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Not applicable - my wedding was legally binding.

Other

Please expand on your answer:

N/A as my wedding was legally binding.

Consultation Question 2:

Please share your views below:

No having a registrar at our wedding did not constrain our wedding vows or the ceremony in any way that we were found to be difficult.

Consultation Question 3:

Please share your views below:

I have no first hand experience of weddings during COVID. My work colleague's sister was hindered from celebrating her wedding because of COVID and according to her preferences for a large family attendance. I heard the girl was devastated. I felt very sorry for her, and her family because so much effort and cost had been put into the wedding party arrangements.

Chapter 4: Preliminaries

Consultation Question 4:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

It is a long time since I married, and I don't remember whether this was a common rule 21 years ago or not. My experience was of being a fairly close resident in the area I wished to marry in. We must have felt unaffected by this particular law.

My concern - Are there any safeguarding checks that need to take place regarding the couple during the seven days. Are there any identity/national residency checks that take place during this time?

How long does it take to check someone's legitimate identity and national residency?

By placing unfair pressure on a registrar seems inappropriate unless one of the persons wishing to marry are about to die or there is some emergency about housing. The dying person may want a dependent who isn't married to them to live in the house they own. If they weren't legally married they might struggle to inherit the house and remain in it. The same is the case for a dependent child whether adult or minor.

I think not having time before the wedding to give prior notice may increase the pressure placed on the registrar department. I also think it may have far reaching consequences for those trying to have a sham wedding or a forced wedding if enough time isn't given to administer paperwork such as identities and nationality.

Consultation Question 5:

No

Please expand on your answer:

I don't agree with 'at a later date' It is too late then. If the registration is done online how will the registrar be able to identify both parties. Both parties should present themselves at the office well in advance with photo ID and passports to prove their identity. Both should prove they are of legal consenting age.

A person online can falsely register their intent to marry a person who is under age and cannot consent or who doesn't want the marriage or someone who is under the influence of people forcing them into marriage.

Consultation Question 6:

another period of time.

Please expand on your answer:

For me, it isn't about placing a time limit but about ensuring thorough checks are being made to ensure the safety of under age children being forced into marriages, vulnerable women being forced into arranged or sham weddings. Couples marrying through a financial arrangement or marrying for visa reasons. The time needed to sort out a relevant national might be shorter or longer than someone who is seeking asylum, or one party is dying. I think the time limit should be according to how long it takes for each individual case and according to the individual couple's circumstances.

Consultation Question 7:

Please share your views below:

Interviews by proxy may be illegitimate with persons posing under the identity of another person.

Who would the in- person be? A relative a member of the same community? Would the in-person be trained under the UK law? There would be less need for an in-person interview if the couple showed up to register at a fully lawfully trained registrar's office in person. The fully trained registrar might be better placed to see from the couple's body language what is happening if it is a sham or forced marriage.

Consultation Question 8:

Please share your views below:

I think it should be possible for notice to be given outside England and Wales where one of the couple who is a resident in Scotland or in a specified Commonwealth country or territory, or on a naval ship at sea, and both are relevant nationals or exempt from immigration control. It is difficult to serve notice in person when a couple are at sea for 6 months at a time.

Consultation Question 9:

No

Please expand on your answer:

I think it is usual for a public notice to take place in a local newspaper if the couple want this, unless this would expose either of the couple to a risk of harm.

I don't think the notice of marriage should be publicly displayed online - If someone is searching for a couple online it might be intrusive and be part of stopping them from marrying.

But on the other hand, having a notice exposed on line might save a woman or a man from being forced into a sham marriage or forced marriage. They might be identified by a friend, relative or member of a community who knows that one of them have gone through a sham marriage before or forced marriage.

Consultation Question 10:

No

Please expand on your answer:

What is the schedule?

This language is too vague language I don't know what I am agreeing to or disagreeing with.

Consultation Question 11:

No

Please expand on your answer:

No, once again I don't know what the schedule refers to. I don't know what an officiant is. Is it someone fully trained under the UK law to carry out a legal marriage? Is it the registrar? If so, they would be employed by the Registry office anyway and known to them.

Consultation Question 12:

No

Please expand on your answer:

No because I don't know who the officiate refers to. I don't know what the schedule refers to.

If it refers to a registrar who is fully trained under the UK Law then that is fine as long as they are fully trained and can provide formal identity.

Please share your views below:

What other circumstances?

Again, what is the officiant. How are they qualified?

If there is a call for an overwhelming number of couples who wish to give notice of their wedding and actually get married i.e. in war times, times of pandemic or crisis then I think that a registrar's assistant fully trained under UK Law should be capable of carrying out the UK Law.

Consultation Question 13:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The wording of the question presents a divided kingdom, whereas I think that Scotland is part of the United Kingdom. There is the implication that in future a marriage performed in Scotland will not be legally valid in England. The wording creates a situation that might lead to different legal terms and conditions of marriage for different parts of the united kingdom like in the United States.

Consultation Question 14:

No

Please expand on your answer:

What are the rules about where banns can be published? Your question should itemise the exact rules you are referring to.

If an Anglican or any church is injured by war damage as they have been in Central Africa and various places it will be necessary to authorise the Anglican wedding to take place in a relevant nearby church, so the wedding may continue.

Consultation Question 15:

Please share your views below:

I think banns are commonly and traditionally read in the church where the wedding is to take place but if the church happens to be damaged by war or flood or some other catastrophe then provisional arrangements could be made to publish them in a relevant nearby church.

Consultation Question 16:

Please share your views below:

Which clergy? What is the exact role of the clergy you are referring to? Are you referring to the vicar, incumbent, ordained? Yes, if you mean the church vicar as they are the ones marrying the couple, I think clergy should have the power to call for documentary evidence and be required to check such evidence and be required to meet with each of the couple separately before banns are published. Where Clergy are fully trained by law to check the couple aren't in a sham arrangement or forcing marriage on the other they should have a right to call upon documentary evidence.

Consultation Question 17:

Please share your views below:

Yes, I think both of the couple should be required to attend and make separate declarations that there is no impediment to their marriage before a common licence is granted to authorise an Anglican wedding. Attending separately gives each individual a chance to speak for themselves without the other couple present. It provides an opportunity for a woman to speak up about a forced marriage or sham marriage or any intimidation.

Consultation Question 18:

Anglican preliminaries should continue to be recognised as legal preliminaries to weddings officiated by the Church of England and the Church in Wales; or

Please expand on your answer:

Who is an Anglican Preliminary? Are they the vicar etc? If so, yes, I believe that Anglican vicar should continue to be recognised as legal preliminaries to weddings officiated by the Church of England and the Church in Wales because it is common practice and the tradition of the church. There is a sense of security in this tradition which brings extra relational and faith meaning to a couple. Once a person has been ordained I believe their full role is to be respected as being ordained before God.

Chapter 5: Officiants

Consultation Question 19:

No

Please expand on your answer:

In your consultation you use the word officiant - I don't know what or who that is. Is this a new role to replace the Registrar?

It seems your intention is to replace Anglican clergy who perform legal marriages with an independent registrar (officiant).

Ordinands (Anglican clergy) are just as capable of performing legal duties as are independent officiates. If they are trained under the UK Law then why not continue to use them and make life easier?

A person isn't necessarily going to be more honest or respectable just because they are called officiant or Anglican. It is about the individual not the title.

Consultation Question 20:

No

Please expand on your answer:

What is the difference between a registration officer and an officiate? Is it the same role?

Additionally, by the wording of the consultation you appear to want marriage which is only by the law and not religious. If registration officers (officiates) only officiate at civil weddings then they will not be able to attend Pentecostal, Baptist, Methodist weddings or Mosque weddings (I don't know anything about other kinds of weddings and so I can't comment on them). I married in a Pentecostal church and booked the registrar for the service at the church. It went well. It seems a shame to change the way things are done. It separates the human flesh and the spiritual soul as though they are two separate things. Yet to be human is to possess all three. The cost would be more to go to the Registry office than the church. It would take away something of the legitimacy of the church wedding and everything it stands for. I wanted to be married lawfully so I would have rights recognised by the UK Government and be safer. But I know the UK Government doesn't always recognise the kind of laws that are in the bible or spirituality. The church are almost second class to the law. For me as a Christian I believe God fulfils the law in love but people aren't perfect, and so they need the law.

Consultation Question 21:

No

Please expand on your answer:

I think the registration officer needs back up and support. They should have a witness to back up their integrity too. Church vicars have lay ministers to help them conduct weddings as well as lay people from the congregation to support them with readings and music. In the same way a Registration Officer should have other people involved.

Consultation Question 22:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

I believe that men and women who have followed Holy Orders deserve this role. Especially when they are fully trained to carry out legal duties. I believe it would help the church and parish for the government to provide full training under the law for both vicars and Lay Ministers to marry people.

Consultation Question 23:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

1. For religious organisations, other than the church of England, the relevant governing body should be responsible for booking an appointment with the registrars office for the registrar to come out and marry them legally. A church or mosque wedding should not take place without a registrar. It would not be legal. It should be conducted in the same place as the religious wedding.

2. For non religious organisations my answer would be similar to ensure equality.

Consultation Question 24:

No

Please expand on your answer:

For the sake of equality under the law, each organisation should be allowed to define itself. Other organisations who do not agree with them should not be forced to accept this definition. The organisation should not be allowed to force its interpretation on another organisation or even on the congregation in its organisation.

Please share your views below:

It would be useful to have a list. It's good to have organisation and order. Only the groups who want to be included on such a list should be included.

Consultation Question 25:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

I think there should be a separate question written for religious organisations and for non religious organisations. I think there are assumptions about the patterns organisations follow. There is the assumption they will both have the same depth of levity regarding marriage and what it means. It doesn't mean the same to both organisations. One believes in God and the other doesn't. Therefore they should have separate questions designed for them.

It is interesting you want to use the word 'body' to describe a group of non religious people when this is usually used by religious people to describe the representation of Christ on earth in the church.

There seems to be an assumption that both organisations follow similar rituals and ceremonies or would want to. The commission is in danger of making one organisation appear pseudo and one valid.

Consultation Question 26:

Please share your views below:

This question seems to suggest that religious organisations and non religious organisations, in time, will not be allowed to hold personal views or practice and free speech speech.

What unlawful purposes are you suggesting these organisations would promote?

Why would this commission even suggest that a religious organisation would promote an unlawful purpose? It clearly has its own agenda.

Public morality is in a constant flux of change. It changes and then laws are modified to suit the change. Morality becomes less and less and laws allow more and more of what was once considered immoral is now moral. Those who once upheld morality are now considered criminals. No one will be allowed to debate. Religious organisations are treated as guests in their own communities; they are no longer the majority.

I agree with the Christian Institute who say: "As public policy is also in a constant state of flux along with morality, aren't the public now in danger of spiralling downhill into an abyss influenced by the media? This proposal sounds reasonable, but there is a danger that it could become a mechanism for penalising moral views that contradict prevailing opinion, which changes over time. Popular culture is increasingly at odds with faithful biblical teaching on marriage, sexual ethics and identity.

"contrary to public policy or morality" is too subjective an assessment. It would risk those with unpopular but entirely legal views being excluded from nominating officiants.

The test should focus on objective criteria. These could include promoting purposes that are illegal or support illegal activity (such as terrorism), that advocate the violent overthrow of democracy, or that undermine the rule of law.

Consultation Question 27:

Please share your views below:

I believe that religious or non religious organisations should have a registrar who is independent and fully trained in the law to oversee the legal aspects of the marriage to ensure the security of the woman and any other vulnerable dependents within the marriage.

Consultation Question 28:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

I believe that religious and non religious organisations, apart from those already trained to oversee the religious and lawful side of marriage, should book the registrar to attend a wedding that takes place within their buildings.

Consultation Question 29:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

What does it mean to be an independent officiate. Independent of what - Religion philosophy, public policy? Morals?

Could someone with a criminal record officiate at a wedding? Could someone on the sexual offending list officiate?

Could a Muslim officiate at a Christian wedding and vice versa? Could a Buddhist officiate at a Muslim wedding?

Could a person of alternative sexual beliefs attend and officiate at a heterosexual believers wedding even though one might feel afraid of the other or wish to aggravate the other?

Are these independent officiates fully trained under UK law?
At present, only civil registrars and religious officiants are able to officiate at legally valid marriage ceremonies at the moment. This question seems to pose a vehicle for 'independent officiants' to be able to perform legal wedding ceremonies. The consultation paper says that the Law Commission is not asking about whether independent officiants should be allowed, just how it might work if they were allowed. However, this is an opportunity to raise concerns about independent officiants.

My answer is no because presently, wedding officiants are either highly trained registrars or religious representatives who are likely to have strongly-held beliefs on marriage. It is vocational for many of them. Allowing independent officiants would open the door to those who may not place such a high value on marriage.

Independent officiants (known as 'celebrants') can currently conduct weddings that are not legally binding. I have heard these have included ceremonies underwater, in a sadomasochism dungeon, at a comic book convention with a couple dressed as fictional characters, and at a ruined leper hospital on Hallowe'en.<sup>1</sup> Another involved a couple dressed as hedgehogs. I believe such ceremony's if officiates are allowed to perform the contract would lead to undermining the dignity of marriage.

I would not want an officiate who hates my religion, beliefs and is against what I stand for attend my wedding. I would want whoever attended my wedding or that of my family to be a well wisher.

Consultation Question 30:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

People within an organisation might end up choosing someone who from their own beliefs to legalise a sham wedding or a forced wedding being deceived as being 'fit and proper' or as part of a conspiracy to deceive.

Consultation Question 31:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

I still don't understand the difference between an officiant and someone who works at the registry office. What is the difference between their qualifications and what is required of them?

Consultation Question 32:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

It is important they don't make it a business. But that doesn't stop them from taking a back hander or bribe to officiate at a sham or forced marriage.

Consultation Question 33:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

I think it would be better if these officiants are paid by the government a set fee rather than being self employed.

Consultation Question 34:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

I think it would be better for the person to be employed solely by the government as a civil servant. And monitored by government officials.

Consultation Question 35:

Please expand on your answer:

I don't understand the question. What time limit? What time limit on the authorisation of officiants. What is meant by the authorisation of officiants? Does it mean their education into being officiants and the time it takes to become qualified. Or does it mean the time limit to how long an officiant can be an officiant? I think if employed by government they could be officiants for life as long as they do a good job.

Consultation Question 41:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

I don't think an officiant should have to continue to do a degree or masters but I do think they should have three yearly safeguarding training or health and safety at work training etc. There should be courses available to them to improve their approach or learn to be positive about the people they may encounter who have difficulties.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

1. a. During a wedding ceremony the couples already say they consent to one another in legal binding words.
- 1.b. The couple should be required to express that there is a legal binding impediment if there is one. It is not fair to the other person to keep in secret a prior marriage, a criminal record, poor and abuse behaviour, alcoholism in fact anything that would might cause the couple to have a mental health issue if they found out after they were married.
- 2 Consent should always be given verbally in public at the ceremony, sign language used by the deaf in front of the public, as well as a signature from person in the couple.
3. Having a document to be signed by both the couple to show consent would also help the public and registrar identify the marriage was genuine.
- 4 The marriage should be formed at the point it is signed on a piece of legally binding paper contract. Pre- shown to the registrar before the wedding ceremony.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The Marriage Act 1949 sets out specific language that must be used by the couple to declare that they are free to marry and to express their consent to do so. These short phrases are known as the “prescribed words”. This question proposes removing prescribed words and instead requiring only the expression of consent “whether orally or otherwise”

The prescribed words form a foundation for the declarations that are required for a marriage. Without them the wedding ceremony can be as meaningless as a couple or officiant chooses, and legal marriage can become nothing more than a certificate from the Government. Marriage is founded on solemn promises made between two parties. Under these proposals it would be possible to have a legally recognised wedding in which no words were said between the couple, let alone promises of any kind. The commitment made in marriage must be taken very seriously, and without the prescribed words it is much easier to treat the ceremony casually. The prescribed words are only a small part of the entire wedding ceremony. The rules are already extremely flexible about what happens in the rest of the ceremony. It is hard to imagine a genuine wedding in which the prescribed words could not be included at some stage. Allowing wholly personalised wedding ceremonies without any legally-required words would send the message that marriage is an entirely private matter. It could the result in the marriage being sham or trivialised as a political act or hate.

Consultation Question 44:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

I think that Anglican, Jewish or Quaker officials/ leaders should be able to impose their own requirements as to the form of the wedding as a matter of their own practice.

Consultation Question 45:

No

Please expand on your answer:

I need to know which religious content you are referring to.

Please share your views below:

I think that religious organisations when hearing of a couple who belong to their organisation but deciding to marry in a civil wedding because of an impediment might not want them to use religious words. I think there are reasons why they might not be able to marry in a church. For example, on e part might have committed adultery or a sexual offence.

Consultation Question 46:

No

Please expand on your answer:

No, people should have rights to have a religious service or blessing after a civil wedding ceremony especially if they are divorced because a previous partner was an abusive partner. or a partner who was unfaithful. They shouldn't be stopped from having a church blessing.

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The doors of a wedding have always been open to the public.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

It is unclear what safeguards will prevent unsuitable venues being used. How will the dignity of such ceremonies be guaranteed? The consultation states that venues would need to be 'dignified' and 'safe', but lacks precision on what this means or how it will be tested. Venues must not detract from the solemn occasion of the wedding. The Law Commission has made it clear it sees no objection to weddings “in the air”, suggesting that the terms 'dignified' and 'safe' could be interpreted very broadly. Unofficial weddings have been conducted underwater, in a sadomasochism dungeon, at a comic book convention with a couple dressed as fictional characters, and at a ruined leper hospital on Hallowe'en.<sup>5</sup> Such settings clearly trivialise marriage. The law must not allow such venues to host legally binding ceremonies.

Please share your views below:

I think some weddings taking place in beautiful locations will focus on romance rather than the serious nature of a wedding ceremony.

Consultation Question 49:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

I think it is fair to ask people to leave if they are behaving badly at a wedding. People are entitled to their privacy and who they want to share their big day. But if a couple want their wedding on a Sunday it might clash with the usual Sunday Service in a church where people are not well resourced.

Consultation Question 50:

Other

Other

Other

Please expand on your answer:

For me, it isn't about the building it is about the people, their views and belief. It is also down to the practices of various organisations and what they deem as important.

Consultation Question 51:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

It is up to the person conducting the wedding where he or she or transgender wish to hold the service. They are the ones who have to carry out the service. They should have the right to refuse to conduct a marriage if it pricks their conscience.

Consultation Question 52:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Health and safety is a responsibility of officials within any organisation. I still don't know who the officiant refers to - whether this is a new title or just a common meaning given to the person at the head of the organisation. Or a trained by UK Law registrar.

Other

Please expand on your answer:

This sounds reasonable. Except that I don't know who the officiant refers to.

Consultation Question 53:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

I still don't know who the officiant refers to.

Please share your views below:

I think that if a hotel or boat is safe enough to cater for people on holiday it should be safe enough to hold a wedding. Numbers and space and air ventilation should be checked by the person who manages the venue but also by the registrar or celebrant governing the wedding.

Chapter 8: Registration

Consultation Question 54:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

The couple might not want a parent to be named if they have been abused by them.

Consultation Question 55:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

If they are both Welsh and English, yes.

Consultation Question 56:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

No matter how high the level of security is it can never replace human value.

Chapter 10: Validity and offences

Consultation Question 57:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

4. It is considered legal to have a same sex wedding and the couple have no reason to hide their gender, identity.

A religious person has the right to hold the ceremony or not just as the couple have a right to be gay or not. The beliefs of any of them should not be challenged, overlooked, forced upon, intruded upon.

Other

Please expand on your answer:

1. mistakes should not render a marriage void if the couple want to continue in the marriage . These are admin errors and can be rectified.

2. There should be witnesses unless one or both of the couple are dying and there hasn't been time.

3. It should be signed by everyone included. If the couple want the marriage it should not render if void. They should be interviewed separately.

Consultation Question 58:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

I feel the same as in my previous answers. If the couple want to continue in the marriage then it should not be void. Any lack should be quickly sorted and rectified but they should be interviewed separately to ensure both are feeling safe.

Consultation Question 59:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

People should be married on signing the contract and giving notice and gone through a ceremony with a registrar present and witnesses.

If a person has been co-habiting they can have a pre nupture certificate to make things legal.

Some people feel married by nature etc.

Other

Please expand on your answer:

I think marriage should be a religious or non religious ceremony with a legal document to make it a marriage. These items bring levity to the situation. That is has been thought about. That it isn't just an afterthought or to claim money. If people live together they can make a will or have a certificate that gives them rights over the house and estate.

Consultation Question 60:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

3 years is a long time to be in a marriage without consenting.

If someone is forced into the marriage and can prove they hadn't consented then their marriage should be nullified.

Unfortunately in cases of abuse it may be very difficult to prove it. Listening to the person's story and weighing it up with witness accounts that aren't just here say might help.

Consultation Question 61:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Everything should be done legally and through the correct ceremonial channels.

Chapter 11: Special types of wedding

Consultation Question 62:

Please share your views below:

I should imagine it is very difficult to marry if you are in prison, hospital or are housebound and more effort should be done to ensure people are allowed to be together under these circumstances. As long as there is no abuse or manipulation taking place. Both couples could be interviewed where appropriate.

Consultation Question 63:

No

Please expand on your answer:

If they are terminal they may not have time to give notice. I think we should be compassionate about terminally ill people.

Consultation Question 64:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

A registration officer sounds the same as a registrar general. I'm not sure as to the difference as to what comment to write.

Consultation Question 65:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

I don't understand the technicalities of what this means.

Consultation Question 66:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

I don't know what this involves.

Consultation Question 67:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

I think in an emergency it should be made easier for couples to marry as long as the person marrying them know they are both consenting and are safe.

Other

Please expand on your answer:

I think there should be a list of what constitutes an emergency. The emergency situation should be discerned thorough an appropriate process.

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

I think this is straightforward.

Consultation Question 68:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

But I think this should be heavily monitored in case a marriage is forced or a sham wedding takes place.

Consultation Question 69:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

I think I understand this more than the last question. It should be monitored and go through a interview process to ensure one person isn't been kidnapped or forced into marriage.

Consultation Question 70:

Please share your views below:

Haven't a clue - I can't imagine I'd want to hold a wedding on an oil rig or a ship wreck?

Consultation Question 71:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

I think there has to be some kind of paper train about all of this.

Consultation Question 72:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

I think this sounds straightforward. But both of the couple should be interviewed separately to ensure they are not being forced.

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

marriage should be taken seriously so people can avoid being hurt and wasting money.

Other

Please expand on your answer:

There may be a vicar on board or a lay minster who can perform a religious wedding if they have the correct wedding form. They will need to give some notice to the inland of their intention and have correct contracts communicated back wards and forwards.

I don't think just anyone can marry a couple. They need to have had formal training.

Consultation Question 73:

Please share your views below:

I'm not aware of any.

Consultation Question 74:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

It depends on how far they are away from port and how long it takes them to get there or send their registry forms to the port. The ship might not carry communication equipment.

Chapter 12: Fees

Consultation Question 75:

No

Please expand on your answer:

I think we should be more helpful to a person who is detained because they need all the help they can get. The same for a housebound person.

Consultation Question 76:

(2) a separate fee from other forms of giving notice, set nationally on compassionate grounds at below cost level.

Please expand on your answer:

I think we should be more compassionate in an emergency.

Consultation Question 77:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

I think this is usual.

Consultation Question 78:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

I think that charging to ensure a location is safe will make people think carefully they are not trivialising marriage or endangering their guests.

Consultation Question 79:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

I think weddings should be pre approved. This prevents them from being taken lightly.

Consultation Question 80:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

I think their time should be paid for.

Consultation Question 81:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

I don't know enough about this to comment.

Consultation Question 82:

No

Please expand on your answer:

A person detained won't have the money to pay for a registration officer. They should be let off the charge. So should someone who is housebound.

Consultation Question 83:

(2) there should be no fee.

Please expand on your answer:

I think it is better to be compassionate.

Consultation Question 84:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

There are usually costs to administer paperwork.

Chapter 13: The potential impact of our proposals

Consultation Question 85:

Please share your views below:

I think provision would lead to an increase in the number of couples getting married.
I don't have any evidence.

Consultation Question 86:

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

I think that charging people to get married might set the very poor back from getting married. I don't like the idea of officiates earning an hourly rate or getting paid by mileage. I think all people who do this job should be trained centrally and paid centrally by government. but at the same time people who are in charge of conducting marriages should be paid to do a job. Register office weddings have to be booked and it might be difficult to get an appointment.

I think the costs of administration for marriage should be similar where ever people get married. Other costs, meals, clothing, flowers, location, are separate.

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Marriages are based on solemn promises and commitments - the proposal could easily lead to no-words-said weddings. Without prescribed words (to be spoken), weddings might no longer be seen as a serious undertaking ... possibly just a tick-box exercise!

Consultation Question 43:

Chapter 4: Preliminaries

Consultation Question 4:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Seems an unnecessary piece of bureaucracy.

Consultation Question 5:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Proposal reflects the world as it is now, rather than when the laws around notice period were made.

Consultation Question 6:

another period of time.

Please expand on your answer:

The period between in-person interview and the marriage date is an opportunity for both people to reflect on whether this is really what they want to do. It may be that, being on the brink of making vows and a legally binding, lifelong commitment, someone may realise that they are in an abusive relationship and that they need to escape. (Please see below for a suggestion on how this could be checked.) They may therefore need some time to make arrangements. I would therefore suggest a period of at least a month, and preferably six weeks. For the vast majority of couples, who are celebrating something joyous, having to give notice earlier will not be any impediment - they will have been preparing for the event for far longer.

Consultation Question 7:

Please share your views below:

It should be possible to hold interviews remotely, again reflecting the world as it is now.

However, what is of utmost importance is that each party should be interviewed separately. This could actually be easier remotely.

There should also be a question in this private interview asking about whether the relationship is abusive. This routine enquiry approach has been shown to be effective in other settings, such as in maternity units and in debt advice. Evidence has shown that it is really hard for abused partners to seek help, and the more times the question is gently asked and help offered, the more likely it is that they will be able to escape.

I used to be a debt adviser and manager of a Citizens Advice Bureau, where we saw how asking about domestic violence of everyone reduced the shame and stigma, so that people were sometimes able to disclose.

If a question about whether this relationship is abusive were included in the private interview questions as a matter of routine, it would send a message not only to the individuals being asked, but to society as a whole that domestic abuse is unacceptable.

Consultation Question 9:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

The intention behind the original act - that people who know the couple can raise an alarm if there's a problem - is still valid. The current system of publishing notices in register offices reaches barely anyone. Therefore to display notices online makes sense.

I would also suggest there could be a system of notifications, similar to that used by the land registry, so if someone was concerned that a friend or relative was being isolated by an abusive partner, they would be alerted to a notice of marriage. It is a similar check to people being notified when someone makes a power of attorney.

Consultation Question 17:

Absolutely. It is important that both parties are equally involved in making a positive declaration that there is no impediment to the marriage. This would also be an opportunity for a private interview to check whether the relationship is abusive. To have the question asked in the context of a trusted church, for those who are Anglicans, might make it easier for people trapped in an abusive relationship to reach out.

Chapter 5: Officiants

Consultation Question 19:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Free consent is vital here. I imagine it's very rare for someone to stop a marriage during or just before the marriage because of an impediment, but even if it pre very occasionally prevents a false or abusive marriage, it would be worth asking the question. Also, the fact that an officiant is there to provide this check sends a general message that the state is concerned that marriages are properly undertaken.

Consultation Question 22:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Provided they are trained in recognising potential abuse and are given the resources to offer help.

Consultation Question 23:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

There must be strong provisions to ensure that these organisations have policies and procedures in place to ensure they never condone abusive relationships and that they provide officiants with robust training in dealing with abusive relationships effectively.

Consultation Question 24:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Please share your views below:

The principle behind this proposal is sound. However, there might be belief systems that explain humanity's nature and relationship to the universe that discriminate against particular groups, go against the Equalities Act 2010 and promote abuse. Examples of this might be groups that believes homosexuality is wrong, that disabled people should not be allowed to marry and that husbands have a right to sex in marriage, without regard to the wife's consent. It is therefore vital that there are strong rules for which groups can be included and that any group which does not support these laws and principles must not be allowed to carry out weddings.

Consultation Question 25:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Again, there must be provision that the sincerely held belief about marriage does not include, for example, discrimination against particular groups or encouragement to abuse within the marriage.

Consultation Question 26:

Please share your views below:

Absolutely. Please see my answers above.

Consultation Question 27:

Please share your views below:

There is a danger that nominating officiants by office could lead to inappropriate people being able to officiate, without sufficient checks. We have already seen difficulties, for example, where registrars were unwilling to carry out civil partnerships, because they were homophobic. Nominating individuals would lessen this risk.

Consultation Question 28:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

This would provide a check, so that if anyone was concerned about an officiant, they would be able to raise the alarm more easily. As well as providing this list, there should also be a system of raising a complaint against an officiant.

Consultation Question 29:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This could be a way for unscrupulous individuals to be able to carry out weddings that should be unlawful or could be abusive. In order for such individuals to be properly checked, there would need to be a robust system of training, checks, references etc. It's highly unlikely that, in the current financial climate, such a system could be put in place. What is more likely is that a system would be created in name and then not implemented properly, allowing people wishing to exploit sham and coercive marriages a way in.

Consultation Question 30:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This should be done by the state. Self-policing is often ineffective.

Consultation Question 31:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

At least these. Mandatory training should include identifying abusive relationships and officiants should be required to prove they truly understand - this means more than the usual online multiple choices used by many agencies e.g. GDPR. There also need to be inspections and checks to ensure that officiants are carrying out their duties properly. It is not enough just to have CPD.

Consultation Question 32:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 33:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

This could get truly out of hand. I can imagine a case where people might want to make a living out of being an officiant, and could do so really well. However, much of the wedding industry is exploitative, so it would be a good idea to put a cap on how much they can charge for the ceremony.

Please expand on your answer:

This is a 'just in case' provision, but important none the less. There is a general pull in the proposals here to make it easier to get married privately, with few checks. In the vast majority of cases, this would be fine. However, in order to prevent exploitation, it is important that checks remain in place. Making sure that weddings are public declarations, properly witnessed, sends a message that, as a society, we are concerned that relationships are healthy, respectful, equal and loving.

The General Register Office.

It should be recognised that we are now in the realm of business and profit. Venues make a lot of money from weddings. Should they be approved, they would be in a position to increase profits, so it is reasonable to make a substantial charge to them.

There should be a charge for pre-approval, which should both pay for the cost of the approval process, extra training and resources arising from asking questions about abusive relationships during the preliminaries. (Similar principle to banks paying for debt advice.)

Chapter 8: Registration

Consultation Question 54:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The naming of parents harks back to marriage being a commercial transaction and is unnecessary. For some people, their parentage is difficult and insisting on this being part of the wedding certificate could detract from the happiness of the occasion. For example, my son is adopted, so my and my partner's names would be on the certificate. However, there is always a sadness around his birth and adoption, which could be a difficult reminder. Also, with blended families, there can be a question about who actually is the parent. Would there be provision for more than 2 parents, for example. Better to leave them out of it altogether.

Consultation Question 76:

(2) a separate fee from other forms of giving notice, set nationally on compassionate grounds at below cost level.

Chapter 13: The potential impact of our proposals

Consultation Question 85:

Please share your views below:

I don't think any of the proposals will make a difference to the number of people who get married.

However, one of the important functions of the marriage law is to ensure that marriages are not sham or coercive. There is also an opportunity here to help reduce abusive relationships. It is therefore really important that:

- Everyone wishing to get married has a private interview as part of the preliminaries, where they are asked if the relationship is abusive. If abuse is suspected or declared, the person holding the interview should refer to an appropriate agency.
- There are robust provisions to ensure that officiants and registrars are properly selected and trained, so that they do not carry out sham, coercive or abusive marriages. By expanding the number of people who can officiate, there is a danger that unscrupulous people could have a chance to exploit in a number of ways.

My main concern is that widening the possibility of venues does not open up a loophole to allow forced marriage behind closed doors. I have in mind a scenario, for example, where a vulnerable young woman is forced into marriage, in a private room with an officiant who specialises in such marriages. It is important that there are sufficient safeguards to prevent this kind of exploitation from happening.

Consultation Question 5:

No

Please expand on your answer:

See previous answer but I am confused. If you abolish the 7 day notice how can you fix an interview date (presumably before the marriage takes place). It would be unfair to tell a couple they can't get married with less than 7 days notice.

Face to face is much better.

Having used Zoom a lot, it just doesn't convey a person's true behaviour.

I believe there would be an increase in sham marriages if this were to happen.

For religious weddings the bans are read which gives the local community the opportunity to question the validity of the marriage.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

I strongly disagree with this proposal.

There is an implication that the ceremony would be individually designed by each couple.

This isn't an Instagram event - it is a serious public commitment (hopefully for a long time) and it is for the benefit of society as a whole.
In my view, this undermines and undervalues the commitment to marriage.
Couples really need to understand what they are committing to.
I don't understand why the couple can't just add a few extra words of their own to the prescribed format.
Also, it doesn't make sense to be married just by signing a piece of paper.
This really would devalue marriage altogether in my view.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

See previous answer.
I see marriage as important for society possibly even more than for the individual.
The state should recognise this.
It is the glue which holds society together. Those that do not recognise this should not be contemplating it - just live together. No one should feel obliged to marry these days.
Leave marriage for those who take it seriously.
I regret that today, couples often place more emphasis on the celebration of marriage (as a party for friends and family) with the true nature of the vows which will sustain the marriage into the future.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

I think marriage is "not to be undertaken lightly"
It undermines the serious nature of a marriage if it can be held anywhere.
For example, would it be allowed Starbucks or Pizza Express?
The rules have already been relaxed and this should be sufficient.
Again, marriage should not be a social media event. It's a serious commitment.

on inland waters such as lakes or rivers,, in the air, and/or, in private homes.

Please share your views below:

The question is not clear enough. I have assumed "limit" means these venues would not be allowed. Although I have ticked "in private homes" this would also include their gardens.

It is important that the ceremony of marriage is seen to be dignified.
Receptions could be held anywhere.

It is much better to have authorised venues where control can be exercised for dignity and safety.

Consultation Question 49:

No

Please expand on your answer:

I think it is important that the public have regular access to a suitable location for marriage ceremonies. Marriage is a public commitment by a couple otherwise they might just as well just make a promise to each other without any witnesses and even not turn up at all.

Consultation Question 50:

Yes

No

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

This was a very complicated question

Religious weddings sometimes need to take place in hospitals for example.
I think on the whole, religious weddings should take place in Church with only those organisations able to officiate.

Non religious weddings should not take place in Church.

Churches views should prevail on this issue.
I do not think the law should be over riding the wishes of any Church.

A religious wedding ceremony is very different to a civil one.
Tampering with religious weddings should not be undertaken against their wishes.

Consultation Question 51:

No

Please expand on your answer:

There should be identified suitable licensed places for weddings and the officiant should decide if he or she is prepared to officiate at the venue chosen by the couple.

Please expand on your answer:

I don't see this as their primary responsibility but it is very important that a wedding location is dignified.. Safety is a matter for those providing the location but I would expect the officiant to point out any H&S concerns (as any member of the public should).

How will " dignity" and "safety" be defined?
Who would oversee the officiant in this?
Are they to be held legally responsible if the building burns down?
Some officiants will be acting in unfamiliar surroundings. Isn't this too much to expect of them?

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Who will oversee this part of their role?
Advice is one thing, responsibility is another.

Consultation Question 53:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

The pre approval process should be obligatory not optional.

Please share your views below:

This highlights the problem with allowing too much freedom in allowing many locations for wedding ceremonies.

It's not just who should be responsible but who pays for it.

There was more sense when there was just one local registry office which could be monitored by the local council.

Local councils do not have the funds to check every possible location for wedding ceremonies and so Health & Safety resides with the owner of the property.

I can't imagine who would take on the responsibility for whether somewhere is dignified enough.

If the marriage was officiated by an unauthorised officiant then in my view it is void in any event.

The same applies where the religious governing authority has not given permission.

There is no mention of bigamous marriage.

If either one or both parties do not consent (or have the ability to consent) then the marriage should be void.

No

Please expand on your answer:

This is sloppy.

If the marriage is going to be valid anyway, where is the impetus to get it right.

In particular, it is especially important to have witnesses to help to ensure it is not a forced/sham marriage.

This a serious event in a persons life and everyone involved should make sure all the protocols are followed.

Chapter 13: The potential impact of our proposals

Consultation Question 85:

Please share your views below:

I do not believe the current law discourages or prevents couples from getting married.
I believe the proposals may lead to an increase in "sham" marriages.

If anything, I believe couples should really assess why they want to be married and have counselling beforehand. Too many couples enter marriage with a view that it is so easy to get divorced that the commitment isn't there at the outset.
Society also does not seem to take its role in this seriously either.

I cannot provide evidence that marriage breakdown is leading to mental health issues (particularly for children) , financial issues , housing issues and isolation but I know it is happening. My long term married friends have much fewer of these problems. Marriage gives stability not only to couples but to society too.

I do not know why this consultation has been undertaken and at whose request but combined with the revised laws on divorce, I do not understand why marriage is coming under attack when it has positive benefits. Please leave it alone - it's not broke so don't fix it.

Please expand on your answer:

While I agree with the proposed duty in outline, it does not seem to go far enough . Officiants should have a larger responsibility than outlined to ensure that the content and tone of the legal ceremony upholds the dignity and significance of marriage.

Also, the proposals should define what is meant by 'dignity' and 'solemnity'. The consultation seems to view ceremonies taking place "in the air" as being compatible with these tests, which suggests they are easy standards to reach.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

I don't believe it should be possible for someone to get married without being physically present at their wedding ceremony. Simply signing the marriage schedule is not sufficient.

Couples should not be able to say anything they like and should certainly not be allowed to say nothing at all. This would be a significant departure from the public statements couples currently have to make, which are the basis on which a legal marriage ceremony depends.

This risks undermining the important nature of the wedding ceremony and de-valuing the seriousness of the commitment being made.

My understanding is that there is already a large amount of flexibility in the wedding ceremony. The prescribed words are few and couples can add to them in many ways.

It is unreasonable to ask that some specific words are used to show that both people freely consent to the life long commitment they are entering into together.

The proposal that a couple should be able to completely customise their ceremony comes from a distorted view of marriage. A wedding is not just about the couple. The couple enter into a union which is understood by society at large and has been legally defined. So society and the law have an interest in the making of a public declaration. The logic of a customised marriage ceremony is for marriage to be decoupled from the law and wider society. Marriage would become an entirely private matter, rather like a personal interest, rather than the legally binding life long commitment it currently is.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Again, there is a need to ensure a serious and solemn nature to the legal parts of any marriage ceremony. A particular ceremony should not just be allowed because the couple wants it, but because it is appropriate for such an important event.

The idea that a couple should be able to choose a largely "DIY" wedding ceremony comes from a mistaken view of marriage. A wedding is a public declaration in which society and the state have a vested interest.

Having researched the matter, I have found that unofficial wedding ceremonies have included themes such as Alice in Wonderland, James Bond, Lord of the Rings, Game of Thrones, Marvel comics, Beauty and the Beast, Harry Potter, Star Wars and Flash Gordon. One had a 'Woodland Fairy themed ceremony with ponies dressed as unicorns' while another couple dressed as hedgehogs. It is very doubtful that many of these reflected how seriously marriage should be taken.

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The “open doors” requirement helps communicate the public nature of wedding declarations. The open doors requirement was introduced hundreds of years ago as a protection against forced marriage. Forced marriage remains a problem in our society. Removing this requirement encourages the incorrect understanding that marriage is a private matter without any public significance, which is clearly not the case.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Marriage at its heart is a serious and solemn commitment. Venues should not simply be allowed because marrying couples want them, but because they are appropriate places to hold such a significant ceremony.

While there are benefits to a wider range of wedding venues being allowed, this should not be allowed to legitimise the use of inappropriate locations for marriage.

Please share your views below:

Having a wedding ceremony “in the air”, would suggest that the safe and dignified test will not be difficult to meet. Would weddings also be allowed in Burger King or KFC?

Unofficial wedding ceremonies have taken place in an S&M dungeon, underwater, and at a Comic Book convention with a couple dressed as comic book heroes. It would be unacceptable, given the serious nature of marriage, for venues like these to host legal weddings.

Please expand on your answer:

There seems to be a lack of clarity in how venues would be tested for “dignity” and “safety”. While the proposals suggest guidance from the General Register Office, the terms are not defined and relevant safeguards should be outlined, to avoid marriage ceremonies being un-dignified, unsafe and remembered for all the wrong reasons

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

While guidance from the General Register Office is proposed, the terms are not defined and relevant safeguards should indeed be outlined and enforced, to avoid the serious and solemn nature of marriage ceremonies being "dumbed down" by the location chosen.

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

They want to be separate, so it works both ways

Consultation Question 14:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Are you expecting a war? Would make better sense if war was replaced with act or vandalism, weather or terrorism

Consultation Question 15:

Who else needs to know?

Couples are entitled to their privacy

Consultation Question 16:

Please share your views below:

Yes, need to ensure all parties are not being coerced

Consultation Question 17:

Please share your views below:

Why? Unless to make sure all parties are entering into the marriage freely.

Consultation Question 18:

all weddings should be preceded by civil preliminaries.

Please expand on your answer:

Needs a level playing field

Chapter 5: Officiants

Consultation Question 19:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

As long as Officiant does not mean exclusively Registrars, but includes trained, professional Civil Celebrants

Consultation Question 20:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Need to reword the question.

Do you mean they can only officiate at Civil weddings, or that only Registrars can perform civil weddings?

If the former, makes no sense. why would you book a place of worship for a wedding, then not use the clergy?

Consultation Question 21:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

I propose that any properly trained Celebrant can officiate at a wedding.

Doesn't need to be a registrar at all.

Not sure why 2 were ever needed, only a vicar needed in a church!

Consultation Question 22:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Training! Can't just allow it because of their Office! Disproportionately biased in favour of the CofE

Consultation Question 23:

Consultation Question 26:

Please share your views below:

Yes.

We live in a multi cultural society, where we should be tolerant of other beliefs.

Organisations or groups which contravene commonly held public beliefs, communal morality or who undermine British Values should not be allowed to thrive.

Consultation Question 27:

Please share your views below:

Should be named individuals. Holders of Office can change too quickly, some may not want to officiate, others may not be suitable.

Consultation Question 28:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Public should be able to access the information to help them make the appropriate choice for them.
A central registrar would allow this.

Consultation Question 29:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Choice is key for couples.
Every Officiant needs to be treated equally

Consultation Question 30:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Not sure how this would be self regulated though.
How would this work for independent celebrants?

Consultation Question 31:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Assuming that all Officiants/Clergy /Registrars would have to meet the same requirements/have access to training, funding and assessment.

Consultation Question 32:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Although the term expression of belief is open to interpretation

Consultation Question 33:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Independent Officiants spend more time building a bespoke ceremony for their clients which takes far longer than a pre-prepared religious service with their names on a post-it note!

Consultation Question 34:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Celebrants are as diverse as the clients they serve. Can't be pigeon holed into one category vs another. There is often considerable overlap in their own beliefs and functions.

Consultation Question 35:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Need to have a parity with other Officiants

Consultation Question 36:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The whole idea of opening up weddings is to create diversity and choice, not constrain it.

Consultation Question 37:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

I think that professionals are able to successfully self regulate.

Consultation Question 38:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

As a last resort. I think that less than satisfactory Officiants would naturally die off through bad press and reputation.

Consultation Question 39:

No

Please expand on your answer:

There are plenty of professional bodies which already exist which could do this. Most independent Celebrants are members of one or another such organisation.

The GRO is looking to control the diversification of Officiants in order to maintain their own self importance.

Consultation Question 40:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Brings them in line with the clergy

Consultation Question 41:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

How would this be monitored? Creating further obstacles for independent Officiants.

Who would fund it? Unfair to ask self employed independent Officiants whereas religious organisations or local authorities can more easily afford it.

GRO trying to create and maintain control, so how much of this is really about choice?

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 43:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

It should all be about choice, reflecting the couple's beliefs

Consultation Question 44:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Would work well with mixed faith couples

Consultation Question 45:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Choice! For whatever reasons, couples may want a Civil ceremony but with some religious content. This allows couples to have exactly what THEY want.

Please share your views below:

Whatever the couple wants should be included. Like couples, the content would be very diverse, cannot give specific examples.

Consultation Question 46:

No

Please expand on your answer:

As long as the Civil wedding ceremony is acknowledged as the legally binding act, I don't see a problem with a following religious service. This might suit couples who want both, perhaps where one or both cannot marry in a religious service.

Consultation Question 47:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

People are entitled to privacy.
Also, sadly, security needs to be considered

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

It's about time this was sorted out!

Please share your views below:

No limits as long as ceremony is fitting, apt, in keeping with the couple's wishes, and conducted appropriately.

Consultation Question 49:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

It should be about the couple's choice, a place that is meaningful to them.

Consultation Question 50:

No

No

No

Please expand on your answer:

I think that the organisations/religious groups would probably decline requests for weddings from non-members anyway.

Consultation Question 51:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

There may be some instances when the location is not suitable, something that perhaps the couple have overlooked.

Consultation Question 52:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Officiants are not H&S experts. Cannot put legal responsibility for safety on them. That needs to rest with the Event organisers, in the way it would at any other celebrations or gatherings.

Define "dignified" - what one person deems dignified or appropriate may not be another's.

These are both the responsibility of the Event organisers to ensure they are safe, and dignified as they understand the term.

Officiants should have the right to decline to conduct any civil weddings which they have reasonable belief would not be safe or dignified, particularly where this would adversely affect their professional reputation.

No

Please expand on your answer:

Onus should be on the Event organisers

Consultation Question 53:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Officiants need to be able protect their professional reputation

Please share your views below:

Officiants should be able to visit proposed location or property in advance, preferably before accepting the booking.

Chapter 8: Registration

Consultation Question 54:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The wedding is about the couple, not their parents, so why their names and occupations are included is beyond me.

Consultation Question 55:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Cultural diversity and identity is massively important.

Consultation Question 56:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

I think most people would prefer the traditional approach, but some may like the convenience of electronic registration.

Chapter 10: Validity and offences

Consultation Question 60:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

There should be no time limit. If someone was coerced but then prevented from voicing their lack of consent, they need a safety net.

Consultation Question 61:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

It's good to open up weddings to give couples a greater freedom of choice.

We still need to ensure that newer types of weddings, and Officiants carry the same gravitas, legal standing and status.

Chapter 11: Special types of wedding

Consultation Question 62:

Please share your views below:

Need to make it easier and simpler for marriages in extenuating circumstances.

Consultation Question 63:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Only if the registrars came to them, and that it could be done with as little delay as possible.

Consultation Question 64:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Still keeping the authority with the registrars, though!

Chapter 12: Fees

Consultation Question 75:

No

Please expand on your answer:

You already charge too much

Consultation Question 76:

Not Answered

Please expand on your answer:

You shouldn't be charging at all in these circumstances, especially if there is a change in the law which allows remote consultation.

Consultation Question 77:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 78:

No

Please expand on your answer:

It's all about money, isn't it?

As mentioned above, onus is on the Event organisers to ensure location is safe.

Dignified is a matter of perspective

Consultation Question 79:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 80:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Registrars are salaried regardless of where the ceremony takes place.

Fees are high enough already.

If the ceremony takes place outside of the local authority area, it needs to be passed over to the relevant local authority.

Consultation Question 81:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

You would need to give specific information about this.

Consultation Question 82:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Housebound people are less likely to be in employment.

Prisoners have a nil income

No room for compassion?

Consultation Question 83:

(2) there should be no fee.

Please expand on your answer:

Be compassionate!

Consultation Question 84:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Fees would disproportionately adversely affect self employed celebrants

Chapter 13: The potential impact of our proposals

Consultation Question 85:

Please share your views below:

Currently, fees and Red tape must discourage couples from marrying.

My own experience has been less than pleasant. It's more a money grabbing exercise than a celebration of love.

The changes may help younger couples or people with less income to participate in this area of social interaction and life milestone

Consultation Question 86:

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

Costs, availability and accessibility are key factors in keeping groups of people excluded from participating in marriage.

Many want to get married, but in their own way, at a location, date and time of their choosing. They reject the narrow dictations of religious organisations and the current Registrars "service", both of which place too many restrictions to allow them to have the meaningful, personal ceremony they want.

The current requirement for a separate legal marriage on top of a wedding ceremony is financially crippling, not just for the couples but for their guests, too.

Approved venues should have their fees capped, our venue has increased their fee (which is just for the hire of the ceremony room for one hour, plus 2 hours non exclusive use of the gardens for photos) by 50% in one year.

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

I think the proposed changes will dramatically improve everyone's experiences of weddings.

More choice means a more competitive market, particularly in terms of venue and Officiants fees

I'd like to see some regulation of approved venue fees

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it. We would also welcome any data on the size of businesses that are affected by the law or will be impacted under our proposed reforms. :

Having more weddings which suit modern couples' requirements means that the wedding industry as a whole will benefit.

The knock on effect on the economy cannot be overestimated, especially given the massive losses sustained in 2020.

Like many other sectors which have had to adapt and become more flexible, so must civil weddings. If there is no change, numbers will continue to fall, marriage will become less relevant, and there is a potential for people to view the registry service as irrelevant, outdated, out of touch and too expensive.

Consultation Question 88:

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

Local authorities have had a monopoly for far too long.

They have become complacent about the service they offer, seeing it more as an opportunity to generate revenue rather than providing a service.

It will make local government improve, streamline and actually meet the needs of the people they are meant to be serving.

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

Potential salary savings, restructuring, more flexible working.

Increase in status, more faith in the service.

Diversification of services offered

Consultation Question 89:

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

Some of the current legislation and bureaucracy would confuse a QC, never mind ordinary people.

It must really discourage people from trying to create their vision of a perfect wedding.

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

Less confining, confusing, user-unfriendly bureaucracy will attract more couples from outside England and Wales, boosting local economies, providing jobs, and generating income via VAT , Income tax and other streams

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

Consultation Question 91:

Please share your views below:

Hopefully, this will reduce some costs to couples.

I think independent celebrants /Officiants will be the most adversely affected if there are mandatory conditions imposed.

Local authorities will need to find other revenue streams, but they have had the monopoly for so long, a bit of disruption will be good for them.

Having officiated at a wedding during COVID-19 I have seen the anxiety caused to the Bride and Groom and parents to make sure they are doing everything to stay within the law. The restriction on numbers leaving some family members and friends feeling excluded.

From the point of view of carrying out the proceedings in a socially distanced manner it all seemed to be a bit remote not being able to surround the couple in the usual way.

I would support the proposal of the couple choosing the marriage location, especially in the home as this would provide for a much simpler occasion and also minimise the risk of infection.

Wherever the celebration is performed the dignity of the ceremony must be upheld which I would propose could be at the discretion of the officiant. The designated person should have the right to refuse if the selected location is unsuitable for such a dignified occasion.

in private homes.

Please share your views below:

The provision to marry in private homes is particularly of benefit to the community in which I serve. It would make for a more relaxed atmosphere whilst upholding the dignity of the occasion, proceeding without distraction.

The provision of food/drink could be easily facilitated along with photography in the family setting.

It would have been a good provision in the COVID times we have passed through when places of worship were closed for such matters.

Chapter 13: The potential impact of our proposals

Consultation Question 85:

Please share your views below:

I think that many of the proposals are good ones generally facilitating more to get married legally which I would welcome. I hold a strong belief that persons wouldn't live together before marriage.
I have known of instances in the last few months where marriages have had to be put on hold due to Covid restrictions because of not being able to use our registered building. Had there been provision for marriage in a private homes by an authorised person a lot of disappointment could have been avoided.

Consultation Question 86:

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

I know as having performed a ceremony during Covid times the expense to the trust on whose behalf I act was quite considerable in making sure the hall was compliant and all HVAC and water systems were certified fit for use. But more generally the costs of opening a building for a short period of time both financially and environmentally could be reduced if the ceremony could be held in private homes.

With today's connectivity I see no reason why the times in both the notice period and the need for being in residence could be reduced if not abolished entirely for those from overseas.

Consultation Question 91:

Please share your views below:

As I think I have already pointed out in previous answers there are many cost savings to be made in simplifying some of the current processes both financially and environmentally,

1, Where an international marriage is proposed costs to business could be reduced if the use of technology could be instigated in filling out preliminaries online and reducing/abolishing the need for a period of residence.

2, Reduction of costs both financially and environmentally to the organisation if ceremonies can be held in private homes.

3, Cost savings for couples where there has been unnecessary travel to fill out forms and other legal duties which could be done online if a secure way of doing so could be maybe found.

Where one or other of the parties is living in Scotland, Northern Ireland or Ireland but is getting married in an Anglican wedding in England or Wales, they should still have the option of having banns published. It is a public way of giving notice to one's church of the impending marriage.

Please share your views below:

They should have the power to call for documentary evidence, but it should not be a requirement upon them. Likewise, they should have the power to say they need to meet with each couple separately, but it should not be a requirement. For example, if a couple are marrying within a church of which they are members, clergy may know them well enough to be confident that they are not dissembling.

Consultation Question 17:

Consultation Question 18:

Anglican preliminaries should continue to be recognised as legal preliminaries to weddings officiated by the Church of England and the Church in Wales; or

Please expand on your answer:

The Church of England remains the established church and what happens there has legal consequences.

Chapter 5: Officiants

Consultation Question 19:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

The officiant could be the Church of England or in Wales clergy solemnising the marriage, or other authorised person who is part of that church. Church weddings should not require a civil registration officer to attend, although some non-Church of England or -in Wales churches may choose to have a civil registration officer present if they do not have an authorised person who is part of the church

Consultation Question 20:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Some non-Church of England or -in Wales churches may rely upon having a registration officers attend, if they do not have their own authorised person.

Consultation Question 21:

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 22:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Is there any need to change the status quo ante? There should be mechanisms to recognise clergy from other churches e.g. Church of Ireland who would have automatic recognition by the Church of England or in Wales if they were to move to England or Wales.

Consultation Question 23:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

The relevant governing authority of the organisation needs to be clear. For an independent evangelical church, the relevant governing authority would be the eldership of that church rather than some umbrella body.

Consultation Question 25:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Given that independent evangelical churches should be able to nominate officiants, 20 members may be too many. There should not be a specified minimum number, but there should be a church or other governance structure.

Consultation Question 26:

Please share your views below:

"Contrary to public policy or morality" is a subjective statement. Some would argue that certain sincerely held religious beliefs are contrary to public morality, e.g. some would say it is "immoral" that the Church of England does not recognise same-sex marriages. An express exclusion could be used against such organisations or churches.

Consultation Question 27:

Please share your views below:

This would mirror the situation for the Church of England or in Wales.

Consultation Question 28:

Not Answered

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 29:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Churches and other religious organisations have strong beliefs about marriage. Civil registrars have a high level of training. Independent officiants need not have such training, and might misrepresent the beliefs of a church or other religious organisation in the ceremony they use.

Consultation Question 30:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

The "fit and proper" test should come from the religious organisation, and should not require externally imposed beliefs that might lead to an issue of conscience.

Consultation Question 33:

The General Register Office should not give any guidance contradicting the sincerely held beliefs of a religious organisation.

Consultation Question 37:

Consultation Question 38:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

The fit and proper person standard should be that from the church or religious etc. organisation. The General Register Office should not be able to impose a standard that contradicts a church's sincerely held religious beliefs.

Consultation Question 40:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

With the caveat that religious organisations could withdraw their nomination, or if it were vested in an office, e.g. being pastor of a church, the person would have to seek nomination on a personal basis to continue being authorised.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Stick with the prescribed words of the Marriage Act 1949. Couples should still have to declare that there is no impediment to their marriage. Weddings are public occasions. The preliminary interviews could happen privately.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Stick with the prescribed words of the Marriage Act 1949. There is already scope for customisation of marriages apart from the prescribed words. To remove the prescribed words would reduce or remove the public nature of marriage, and imply that marriage is entirely personal between the couple, as opposed to also being within society.

Consultation Question 46:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The open doors make it clear that the wedding is a public and within society, and also allows for the lodging of any objection.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

There are advantages to not having a restriction on buildings. Many churches or religious organisations currently meet in locations not authorised for marriages. Some locations might be inappropriate however e.g. because they trivialise marriage, and it would not be clear how there would be any restriction on inappropriate locations.

Please share your views below:

There should still be an open doors requirement, whatever the venue. Marriages are social, not private. There should still be the ability for someone to attend and object. This would be a guard against sham, forced or bigamous marriages.

Consultation Question 49:

No

Please expand on your answer:

As above, there should still be an open doors requirement, whatever the venue. Marriages are social, not private. There should still be the ability for someone to attend and object. This would be a guard against sham, forced or bigamous marriages.

Consultation Question 50:

Other

Other

Other

Please expand on your answer:

If a religious organisation does not have the right of ownership of its venue, there would be scope for people whom the religious organisation would refuse to marry (on grounds of sincerely-held religious belief) to have a civil ceremony in exactly the same venue, and pass it off as a religious ceremony. It should be clear that any civil or non-religious belief ceremony in a religious venue is not a religious ceremony. No one should have the right of use of a particular venue against the wishes of the owner.

Consultation Question 58:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

There should be an emergency provision in the event of the foreseen impending death of a party to the marriage for the notice period to be shortened, which registrars, clergy or other officiants would have to be able to justify.

Consultation Question 20:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Non- Anglican churches conduct weddings and should be allowed to do so with the presence of a registration officer to officiate. Where this has not been possible it may be regretted that a duplicate ceremony is needed after a Christian wedding has taken place.
It is important that the wedding formalities are supervised to ensure that all legal requirements are satisfied.

Consultation Question 23:

Consultation Question 24:

Not Answered

Please expand on your answer:

Please share your views below:

Weddings should be seen as having a religious basis. Certain secular bodies are avowedly dismissive of religion and some seek to discredit or eradicate those with whom they disagree.
Any group seeking to undermine the spiritual significance of the wedding bond, to trivialise it or introduce and legitimise alternative relationships, should be excluded.

Consultation Question 25:

No

Please expand on your answer:

An external, neutral registration officer should supervise wedding services where numbers are small. Sincerity cannot be taken as an adequate guide for marriage preparation . There needs to be clear understanding of the commitment required as clearly outlined in the Anglican wedding service.

Consultation Question 26:

Please share your views below:

Religious organisations should continue to be able to nominate officiants, regardless of whether their values diverge from those supported by public policy or from what is regarded as moral.

Religious bodies should be free to uphold their established values and not be required to conform to what majority public opinion may accept. Pressure groups should not be allowed to coerce others to subscribe to their tenets. Intolerance of established Judaeo- Christian values is not right. The structure of our society is weakened by removing the foundational principles on which Western democracy has been built.

Consultation Question 27:

Please share your views below:

The officiant needs to be appropriately trained and to act in accordance with an understanding of the significance of marriage. It is important to be able to determine what undesirable motivation may be present, as in fostering an extreme political belief system intent on destroying established moral and spiritual values, or subscribing to an erroneous view of marriage.

Consultation Question 28:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

The nature of marriage should be understood. It is more than a liaison of convenience, to ratify friendship, or to afford legal security and inheritance benefits. All these can be obtained legally without being married. There should be a recognised commitment to union of lifelong duration.

Present actions to simplify the process of marriage dissolution fail to uphold the spiritual nature of the marriage bond. Same sex 'marriage' is an attempt at replication of what is seen to be a desirable and commendable state, but which cannot consummate the union and struggles with the essential natural element of procreation.

Free sexual expression has been promoted as natural human activity but outside a committed, exclusive relationship leads to risk of unexpected pregnancy or spread of coronavirus or venereal disease. The Book of Common Prayer upholds marriage as being protective against such risks.

The General Register Office in association with the Church, should ensure that officiants appointed are willing to uphold the principles underlying good marriage.

Consultation Question 29:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Independent officiants would not act under the authority of with the supervision of the Church. Weddings are more than a matter of personal opinion or community agreement. It should not be permitted for any with heterodox or heretical views to formulate ceremonies in place of the present, conventional wedding.

The venue should be a place in keeping with the solemnity of the occasion.

There should be a stated promise of commitment, with recognition of the obligations and benefits of marriage, and the intention that this should be a life-long undertaking.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

It detracts from the gravity of the decision to merely require that a signature is given at some point, without a definite time and place, available to the public, at which time opportunity should be given to show that there is no impediment to wedding. Glibness, duplicity or errors of omission should be avoided by adhering to a standardised ceremony. This will be better understood by the couple, their families and friends.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Weddings are not a matter of personal construction and should be directed according to established protocol, so as not to be taken on lightly and without adequate preparation.

Consultation Question 44:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The essence of marriage demonstrated by these faith groups should be upheld and these ought to form a pattern for all weddings. A genuine wedding cannot be created between a person and an animal, or with oneself. It is not a subjective matter like buying the car of one's choice, to be later exchanged or sold.

Consultation Question 45:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Civil ceremonies should have a religious content if they are to convey the full significance of marriage.

Please share your views below:

Consultation Question 46:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Many consider that a civil ceremony does not constitute a significant spiritual transaction. It is important for those whose denomination is not authorised to conduct weddings to celebrate with a church wedding. In any case I see no reason to repeal this provision. It could only be with the intention to detract from the importance of the religion in the wedding ceremony.

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Weddings are for everyone not a secretive event. Doors should remain open, even if security is necessary.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The venue should be appropriate and not frivolous or dismissive of the spiritual nature of this commitment. Church buildings provide for a sense of reverence and call for respect and wonder. Ceremonies conducted underwater or in the air cannot convey the same sense of undertaking a major life-changing step, of two joining to become one, with one name and the prospect of being family and forming a foundational unit of society.

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The prescribed words form a foundation for the declarations that are required for a marriage. Without them the wedding ceremony can be as meaningless as a couple or officiant chooses, and legal marriage can become nothing more than a certificate from the Government.

Consultation Question 43:

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

It is unclear what safeguards will prevent unsuitable venues being used. How will the dignity of such ceremonies be guaranteed?

Unofficial weddings have been conducted underwater, in a sadomasochism dungeon, at a comic book convention with a couple dressed as fictional characters, etc.

Such settings clearly trivialise marriage. The law must not allow such venues to host legally binding ceremonies.

Chapter 4: Preliminaries

Consultation Question 4:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Please keep marriage important and significant. A seven day minimum feels very short, providing the means for people to enter the country temporarily simply to gain a marriage certificate.

Consultation Question 5:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Many people are busy and this is convenient. We are in the 21st century.

Consultation Question 6:

another period of time.

Please expand on your answer:

Longer, in order to emphasise the importance and seriousness of the legal contract under consideration.

Consultation Question 7:

Please share your views below:

Proceed carefully. Sounds very convenient. Appropriate safeguards are needed. This sounds like the kind of legislation that could need revision over time to ensure the safeguards.

Consultation Question 8:

Please share your views below:

These sound like exceptional circumstances. The legislation should be framed very carefully to guard against abuse.

Consultation Question 9:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Marriage is a public relationship and a legal contract. In a free country I cannot foresee circumstances where it is reasonable for a couple to be secretly married. In the situation where relatives or acquaintances are hostile towards a couple getting married, this requires addressing separately - it is not satisfactory for the couple to get married knowing that there could be violent opposition if the fact were discovered.

Consultation Question 10:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Don't understand the question. Does it relate to question 9?

Consultation Question 11:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 12:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes with appropriate safeguards so that the couple cannot choose a "sanitised" official officiate and a preferred officiate, and then engineer it so that the preferred officiate gets to oversee the wedding.

Please share your views below:

The "other" circumstances must be listed explicitly in the legislation, otherwise it is elastic and open to abuse.

Consultation Question 13:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

No strong feelings, except that it sounds like a break-up of the UK

Consultation Question 14:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 15:

Please share your views below:

Other churches to whom one or both of the couple are known should be free to publicise the banns. I would not support a legal requirement that they must do so.

Consultation Question 16:

Please share your views below:

Absolutely. Marriage is serious. If a couple want a church wedding, the clergy ideally should check the legitimacy and suitability of the proposed marriage.

I forget whether it was 1, 2 or 3 - the pastor who married us sadly confided to us that the first (say) 3 marriages that he had conducted had all since broken down.

Consultation Question 17:

Please share your views below:

This is reasonable in view of the seriousness of the marriage contract.

Consultation Question 18:

Please expand on your answer:

Chapter 5: Officiants

Consultation Question 19:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Marriage is a serious legal contract

Consultation Question 20:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Why? Such a move restricts and discriminates against couples who want a church wedding but who require a civil registrar. One of the members of the church to which I belong holds office as a church registrar, but some churches have no such registrar in their congregation and would have difficulty hosting a wedding under this proposal.

Consultation Question 21:

Not Answered

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 22:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

This is reasonable. Any couple not wanting such a person to officiate should not be having a church wedding.

Consultation Question 23:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Any couple wanting to be married "by" a religious or non-religious organisation should expect that organisation to apply appropriate checks and balances, including nominating the officiate.

Consultation Question 24:

Not Answered

Please expand on your answer:

Please share your views below:

Consultation Question 25:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

A couple wanting to be married "by" an organisation should be subject to the checks and balances that that organisation applies to marriage.

Consultation Question 26:

Please share your views below:

The proposal sounds reasonable in principle but paves the way to legally discriminate against churches and other Christian organisations in the future. Christians are already being criminalised for holding orthodox biblical views, and the traditional family values that were British values in the 20th century. To avoid draconian measures against sincere and respectful Christian communities (and other faith communities), they must not be excluded from officiating at the weddings of (primarily) the members of their own community.

Consultation Question 27:

Please share your views below:

Consultation Question 28:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Why not? Officiants take on a serious business which impacts the future lives of each couple that they marry. An expectation of accountability is appropriate.

Consultation Question 29:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The proposal devalues marriage.

Many people today do not value marriage, and do not get married. For my wife and myself, our wedding is one of the most important events of our lives: it provides a foundation for stable family life and a stable society. Please do not discriminate against people of traditional family values with this proposal that opens the way for all kinds of "novel" weddings.

Consultation Question 31:

Please expand on your answer:

Due diligence

Consultation Question 32:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Difficult to answer. If officiates do make a business out of it, it should be legally required that the accounting of their business be made public.

Consultation Question 33:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

In principle "yes". Safeguards are needed to ensure that a couple wanting to be married find themselves obliged to use a specific officiate who charges a high fee.

Consultation Question 34:

Not Answered

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 35:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Absolutely, although a legal contest that an officiant has fallen short may be difficult to prove

Consultation Question 36:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Some overall guidance is reasonable. It should not be so specific and legally binding as to prohibit the officiant from proceeding in accordance with the beliefs of the organisation that he/she represents.

Consultation Question 37:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Emphasis is upon the word "primary". I can see the case for a legal order being issued to an organisation to withdraw authorisation from an officiant, where serious complaints have been raised.

Consultation Question 38:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Yes, with appropriate safeguards to ensure that opponents of the organisation that the officiant represents cannot maliciously raise charges against the officiant on the basis of the sincere beliefs and practices of the organisation.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The proposal cheapens and devalues marriage. Marriage must remain a sincere legal contract with non-negotiable obligations on the part of those taking wedding vows.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The proposal cheapens and devalues marriage. Any couple wishing to call themselves "married" must expect to sign up to a minimum standard of obligations that forms the marriage contract. To scale back the current legal obligations is to reduce the value of marriage.

Consultation Question 44:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

The institution of marriage is particularly important and special to faith groups.

Consultation Question 45:

Not Answered

Please expand on your answer:

Please share your views below:

Consultation Question 46:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Whilst I would prefer couples to opt for a church wedding rather than a civil wedding, I can understand a case where the couple prefer a civil wedding, but family members would prefer a religious ceremony: a civil wedding followed by a religious service is a reasonable compromise.

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Understandably, some couples will prefer a quiet wedding, but marriage is a public legal contract and a secret wedding detracts from this.

The proposal is also dangerous because it will make forced weddings easier, when they can be conducted "behind closed doors".

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This proposal devalues marriage. There is nothing to stop a couple from holding a party to their taste as well as a solemn wedding ceremony, but it will be a separate event, a "wedding reception". To keep marriage meaningful, the wedding itself must remain a solemn, respectful ceremony.

Please share your views below:

In order to maintain and protect the special nature of the marriage contract, wedding venues should be restricted to one of a limited choice which should include registry offices, places of worship, recognised community premises, and probably hotels.

Consultation Question 49:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Marriage is an important public contract. Weddings should not be held secretly or privately.

Consultation Question 51:

No

Please expand on your answer:

"Maybe". As per my answer to previous question 48, there should be a well-defined limited choice of type of wedding venue. It may be appropriate for the officiant to decide whether a legally valid venue is approved for a particular wedding.

Consultation Question 52:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

This is a reasonable responsibility. However, it may be hard to define the legal criteria for "safe" and "dignified" in the event of a contest.

Other

Please expand on your answer:

I would expect such guidance to be high level only, perhaps requiring a satisfactory risk assessment. As per my answer to previous question 48, a legally defined list of types of venue suitable for wedding would cover venues that are generally regarded as "dignified".

Consultation Question 53:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

This would be good if it allows fast-tracking of approval of a location for a particular wedding

Please share your views below:

I like the word "optional".

1. Government or Quango office

2. The venue owners or management should apply to the appropriate authority for pre-approval status, completing a standard application form. The authority granting pre-approval would provide a certificate (if the application is satisfactory) which is probably fixed-term (ie, the pre-approval must be renewed with a fresh application, say, every five years).

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Item 1 sounds good.

Risk that items 2 and 3 will be exploited to legitimise a wedding that would not otherwise be approved.

Consultation Question 58:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Marriage is a serious legal contract. There must be some obligation to follow the protocol, otherwise the marriage is void.

Consultation Question 59:

Chapter 13: The potential impact of our proposals

Consultation Question 85:

Please share your views below:

Marriage is a serious legal contract. If a couple has difficulty in achieving a legal wedding, it is because there are safeguards in place. We need to accept that there will always be exceptional cases where the law appears to be unfair: this is the case in all walks of life.

As somebody who places great value on marriage, I would like as many couples as possible to be legally married for the right reasons: I would like to see more marriages, I would like to see fewer marriage breakdowns. To achieve the latter, the safeguards are likely to hinder the wedding of unsuitable partners.

Consultation Question 86:

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

There should be a means of having a low cost wedding for couples who cannot afford a more lavish ceremony.

Apart from that, couples should recognise that marriage is a serious legal contract, and be ready to pay for the associated costs of the wedding.

I have concerns about this. At present wedding officiants are either well-trained registrars or religious representatives most likely holding strong beliefs on marriage. This may not be the case if independent officiants are authorised.

Independents can currently officiate at ceremonies that aren't legally binding. Many of these indulge the couple's fantasy wishes and if such ceremonies became legally binding, would detract from the dignity of marriage.

There is also the commercialisation aspect, as there is presently no financial incentive for registrars.

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

I believe that it should not be possible for someone to get married without being present at the ceremony. Couples saying anything they like or nothing at all would represent a major departure from the current public declarations generally regarded as foundational to the legal marriage ceremony.

There is already considerable flexibility in the current legislation and surely requiring certain phrases being used isn't much to ask as indicative of the intent to be a life-long commitment.

Consultation Question 43:

Please share your views below:

That all depends on the circumstances. The law must be upheld, and seen to be upheld, and the dignity of the wedding and subsequent marriage must be preserved.

Consultation Question 13:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

That depends. If one member of the couple lives in Scotland, N Ireland or Ireland and the couple's wish is to be married in an Anglican church in England or Wales, then it is churlish to change the banns rules for the non-England or Wales resident.

or

Please expand on your answer:

The Church of England remains the Established Church in England, despite the efforts of various authorities to change this situation.

The situation is different for the Church in Wales.

Chapter 5: Officiants

Consultation Question 19:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Of course.

Consultation Question 20:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Allowing secular, state officials to officiate in a Christian wedding would be completely wrong.

Consultation Question 21:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Why might more be needed??

Consultation Question 22:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes, continue as is.

Consultation Question 23:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

This gets dodgy quite quickly, because of the current, politician-produced shambles in terms of all sorts of "religious organisations" and "non-religious belief organisations" now present in our country.

Some of these may be "sound" and some not, and are best assessed in the light of our Protestant Christian constitution as expressed in the monarch's Coronation Oath.

Consultation Question 24:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

A "non-religious belief organisation" is just as much a "religious belief organisation" as any other, for it involves a belief about God (in this case, the absence or irrelevance of God), with the lifestyles of its supporters expected to conform to this belief system.

So this effort to distinguish between religious and non-religious is flawed from the start.

Please share your views below:

Best of luck with this one. Once Almighty God as revealed in the Holy Bible is "chucked out", as has been occurring in so many ways in this country for so long now, then anything goes, and the "anything" is no doubt protected by human rights etc.

Consultation Question 25:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

A reluctant Yes but many of these questions are now largely missing the point.

Consultation Question 26:

Please share your views below:

Yes for the exclusion of organisations whose activities are "contrary to public morality", but "public morality" is now ever-changing due to the distancing of the State from our Christian heritage and constitution. So who is to say?

Truly we are now reaping what governments of different political parties have been so foolishly sowing for so long.

Consultation Question 27:

Please share your views below:

Individuals holding suitable office - not just individuals, and not just office.

Consultation Question 28:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

We now have in our midst organisations that are not in step with our heritage, customs and laws.

Consultation Question 29:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Please expand on your answer:

Of course, but they alone should not be the arbiters of this. See my answer to Q28.

Consultation Question 31:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

A reluctant Yes.

Consultation Question 32:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

A strong Yes. Marriage is under enough threat these days as it is in view of foolish political decisions taken over previous years. Nothing musty be done to weaken the sanctity of marriage.

Consultation Question 36:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Of course.

Consultation Question 37:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

The organisation has a say, but also the State.

The problem with these issues is the State is now desperate to treat all organisations the same to avoid being accused of discrimination, when they are very far from being the same. Many are broadly on track with our Christian heritage etc, but some are most clearly not.

The State must retain the right to distinguish so as to give due recognition to our continuing Christian constitution.

Consultation Question 40:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Chapter 13: The potential impact of our proposals

Consultation Question 85:

Please share your views below:

The widespread practice of pre-marriage cohabitation does not help.

It is quite right that getting married does involve some effort on the couple's part, and the current state of the relevant laws cannot really be blamed for putting people off making the effort.

Generally speaking I think your proposals would facilitate marriage, as long as the solemnity of the step and occasion are retained.

Consultation Question 86:

Chapter 5: Officiants

Consultation Question 19:

Consultation Question 20:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This would immediately affect anyone who is an official registrar for weddings, who belongs to any church. As someone who has been such a registrar, and has acted on behalf of many couples, I am concerned that proposals would eliminate the registration of weddings on church premises if registrars are only allowed to officiate at civil weddings. Where churches do not have their own appointed registrar, how can church weddings take place?

Consultation Question 26:

Please share your views below:

The phrase “contrary to public policy or morality” indicates a reliance solely on what is acceptable to cultural thinking and behaviour at any given time ( a moveable feast). As our society is now at odds with centuries of traditional views on marriage, sexual ethics and identity, those with unpopular yet legal views on such matters might well be denied the right to nominate officiants. Therefore there should be a concentration on objective criteria.

Consultation Question 29:

No

Please expand on your answer:

At present civil registrars and religious officiants carry out this role. Those appointed in churches etc. most likely hold strong convictions about what marriage is; to appoint “independent officiants” would allow those, who do not regard marriage with such seriousness, to officiate. Marriage would then inevitably be less valued. This would only weaken further the fabric of our society.

I understand that independent officiants currently conduct weddings that are not legally binding, in the most bizarre locations. Again the dignity and worth of marriage would be undermined.

Opening up what might well become a competitive market for independent officiants would raise concerns re costs, when the goal of reducing costs was a stated aim the Government gave the Law Commission only in 2018.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Marriage is founded on solemn promises, made before witnesses between two people. Under the proposals under consideration, it would be possible to have a legally recognised wedding, which is merely certificated by the government. When marriage is treated lightly, then again, we should not be surprised when there is an increase in separation and divorce.

Without the prescribed words and allowing wholly personalised ceremonies in whatever location in whatever the participants decide, the occasion would be treated more casually and simply a private matter.

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Marriage is not a private affair but one of a central building block of our society and important to society as a whole. Also for weddings to be open to the public is a way of protecting the vulnerable against a forced marriage and to prevent bigamy from taking place.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The law at present specifies that weddings take place only in buildings registered for that purpose. While there are advantages to changing the status quo (many churches worship in shared facilities such as schools or community centres and therefore cannot currently have weddings there), there is the real danger of holding weddings in inappropriate venues that would trivialise marriage. Venues should not detract from the seriousness of the occasion. The lack of objectivity as to what is 'dignified' and 'safe' and how the venue is to be sounded out gives concern as does the Law Commission's seeing no objection to holding weddings "in the air"

Chapter 5: Officiants

Consultation Question 19:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 20:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Many churches rely on civil registrars as they do not have their own authorised person. It would be unfortunate if a civil ceremony separate to the church wedding would be forced upon the couple.

Consultation Question 23:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Yes - for religious organisations* other than the Church of England or the Church in Wales, the relevant governing authority of the organisation should be responsible for nominating officiants to officiate at weddings. But not for non-religious belief organisations to officiate at weddings.

Consultation Question 26:

Please share your views below:

'contrary to public policy or morality' is too subjective as those who disagree with public policy or morality, though entirely legal, could be excluded from nominating officiants. The test should focus on criteria that are illegal (such as terrorism) or undermining the rule of law.

Consultation Question 29:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Trained officiants or religious representatives should have and are likely to have strongly-held beliefs on marriage. It should be kept this way. It has already been seen that many Independent officiants have already made a mockery of marriage.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The 'prescribed words' are the foundation for the marriage so without them the wedding is meaningless - they might as well just get a certificate from the government. Marriage takes commitment and if no promises are made then call it whatever you want but it is not a marriage! A real marriage is serious; it is not casual nor an entirely private matter. It is a very public matter to be taken seriously.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

No - the traditional 'prescribed words', the seriousness of public vows, the solemnity and dignity of marriage must be upheld by law. As said, marriage cannot be personalized to the point of mocking public vows. Officiants have already got a very bad track record of agreeing to outlandish wishes. which are highly offensive to people of various faiths.

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The 'open doors' requirement is very important as it makes clear that marriage is not private but a public affair and very important to society as a whole. A open wedding for the public can also protect against forced marriage and bigamy.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

It must be recognized that inappropriate venues must be guarded against. The dignity and solemnity of the ceremony must be maintained - so what safeguards will be put in place and how will it be tested. Venues that have been used, such as underwater, at comic book conventions, ruined leper hospitals on Hallowe'en, hot air balloons are not appropriate!

Please share your views below:

The ceremony must be held in a public venue accessible to the public and the dignity and solemnity of the ceremony must be upheld.

Please expand on your answer:

No fee would be unfair to others including the registration officer.

Consultation Question 84:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

It's logical and equitable.

Chapter 13: The potential impact of our proposals

Consultation Question 85:

Please share your views below:

I don't think that it will make any significant difference. There are already tax advantages for married couples. It has more to do with social customs and with fewer people having religious beliefs.

Consultation Question 86:

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

The current law and costs are not a deterrent for couples. What is a problem is the escalating cost of clothing, flowers, cars and of the reception.

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

I can't see any real benefits to the proposed changes.

Many churches do not have their own authorised person to register weddings and rely on civil registrars.

Some do not hold weddings very frequently and others are not very familiar with the legal requirements , usually because the church is small or it doesn't have a minister.

This proposal could stop some churches being able to conduct weddings, as the consultation points out that half of the places of worship registered for weddings, do not have an authorised person to conduct weddings. Many will be churches who can conduct weddings at the moment but won't be able to under these proposals as there is not a person authorised to do this.

Some churches may find themselves falling foul of weddings law as they will have to be responsible for legalities they are not familiar with.

The phrase 'contrary to public policy or morality' is too subjective, in that it may exclude those with unpopular views, but which are entirely legal.

The test should include those that are promoting illegal activities or purposed, e.g. terrorism, that could put forward the violent overthrow of democracy or may attack the rule of law.

Consultation Question 29:

No

Please expand on your answer:

At the present time, those officiating at weddings are either religious representatives, such as ministers, or highly trained registrars. If independent officiants are allowed, weddings could be conducted by people who do not hold such high values on marriage.

An example of this is where independent officiants (celebrants) are allowed to conduct weddings that are not legally binding, and these have been held in inappropriate places that demean the seriousness and dignity of marriage.

Some might choose a celebrant because they have been refused the religious ceremony that they wished. An example of this may be a couple choosing to marry in a religious setting, where their belief or behaviour do not reflect the religion in which they have chosen to be married. An independent officiant could conduct a wedding, which may misrepresent the religious group's position on certain issues.

At the moment, there is no financial incentive to officiate a wedding. Allowing independent officiants, could well make this a business matter. There may be those who would be more flexible with the ceremony for financial gain, thus reducing the seriousness of the occasion. This could also defeat the object of the Government trying to reduce the cost of wedding venues, which was one of the stated aims given to the Law Commission in 2018.

This could also reduce the seriousness of the marriage ceremony as a recent study revealed that most independent celebrants give little restriction to couples as to what they can include in the ceremony. It is not clear what training or safeguards there will be to prevent this.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The prescribed words are so important as they form a basis for the declarations that are required for a marriage. If these words are not included, the wedding ceremony have as much or as little meaning as the couple or officiant decides. This would make legal marriage just a Government certificate.

Solemn promises are made to each other by the couple in the wedding ceremony, but under these proposals, it would make it possible to have a legally represented wedding with no words being said by the couple or any promises made of any kind.

Commitment in marriage is so important and must be taken really seriously. With no prescribed words it could just be a casual arrangement.

The prescribed words are not the full ceremony, couples are already able to include other things in the rest of the ceremony. It should be possible to find some point in the wedding to include the prescribed words.

To allow wedding ceremonies to take place with no legally required words would create the impression that marriage is a completely private matter.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Marriage is so important and serious and should be shown in the ceremony and this should be demonstrated far more than personalising it to the couple.

Ceremonies that are non-legally binding are already very personalised.

If it becomes a requirement that officiants have to ensure that they do not undermine the dignity and seriousness of marriage, this will not stop couples finding an officiant who will allow them to carry out their most outlandish wishes.

If couples are allowed to customise their own weddings, it would be possible for them to mix elements from different religions, which would be offensive to people of those faiths.

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Open Doors is really important as it emphasises that marriage is not a private affair but is important to society as a whole.

A wedding held privately gives out the impression that it is only of interest to the couple, which is not true.

Enabling weddings to be open to the public, is a way of protecting against forced marriage or bigamy, for example.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

I am really concerned that unsuitable venues could be used that may diminish the dignity of the occasion.

The venues for the wedding should not distract from the solemnity and dignity of the marriage ceremony. How will venues that are 'dignified' and 'safe' be ensured?

Unofficial weddings have been conducted in inappropriate places, such as underwater, in sadomasochism dungeons, etc. Also, couples have been dressed up as cartoon/fictional characters. These settings do diminish the dignity of the wedding ceremony.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

For something as important as marriage I think that both parties to the marriage should be present to give their consent. No system is fool-proof, but, if parties do not actually have to be present, surely there is more room for coercion if one of the parties is not actually willing. If both parties have to be present, at least the minister has a chance of observing if one party is in any way unwilling.

The C. of E. ceremony has both consent and vows. One implies an agreement to proceed and the other defines the specifics of the agreement. Both are needed. The Law Commission suggestions above seem to me too loose and ill-defined.

As a Christian I believe that marriage is a God-given institution and that it should express God's intention for marriage. It cannot be any shape that someone likes to suit their own taste. Marriage has a public aspect as well as a private one.

There are plenty of ways for a couple to include what they want in their marriage arrangements, but the core of it, the consent and vows, should not be negotiable.

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

As I say in the answer to 42, marriage in Christian understanding has a public-facing aspect as well as a private one.

I grant that a closed-door policy is some insurance against a party who is bent on preventing someone else's marriage. But this is surely so rare that it is not worth jeopardising the fact that marriage has a public-facing aspect.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

I think this is too wide.

If marriage is intended to be a lifelong commitment, involving not only consent but agreement to specific principles (see 42), this needs to be done in a setting that is conducive to the thoughtful and serious exchange of these vows.

By all means go sky-diving or scuba-diving after the ceremony, but I don't think it is realistic to say that anywhere and everywhere is a suitable setting for the serious business of a marriage ceremony.

Please expand on your answer:

I think they should have the training as other official registrars, not just because of their office

Consultation Question 23:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Providing the relevant training or explanations are given to undertake the task in a responsible manner.

Consultation Question 24:

No

Please expand on your answer:

I consider that the official registrar should attend unless the other safeguards indicated in earlier sections are retained. regarding the solemnisation of the wedding are retained.

Please share your views below:

Only in respect of those organisations that will retain the set wording for the solemnisation of the marriage by the couple in making a commitment to each other.

Consultation Question 25:

No

Please expand on your answer:

A sincerely held belief can mean anything. I do not consider the wording public policy or morality to be adequate

Consultation Question 26:

I think the officers should be named in each case.

Consultation Question 28:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Sure a record should be maintained by the General Register Office of nominated Officiants.

Consultation Question 29:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Independent officiant are likely in some cases to place a low value on marriage and its importance in the community. In this way the respect of a marriage couples could be downgraded.

Consultation Question 30:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes every time.

Consultation Question 31:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

This would be necessary in each case.

Consultation Question 32:

Where such action becomes necessary, provided full and adequate training was given in the first place.

Consultation Question 39:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Again where such action becomes necessary, provided full and adequate training was given in the first place.

Consultation Question 40:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

I cannot think that there should be a fixed time limit.

Consultation Question 41:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Most professions need to be updated from time to time in new regulations and practices.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Marriage is a covenant between two people and becomes the bedrock of the security felt by the two people to enable them to express themselves personally to each other in love and confidence. Set words enable which are legally recognised are clearly understood by the people as entering into the commitment. Any words would not achieve that and would be much easier to treat the marriage casually like any agreement in life.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Although this seems a nice gesture, I do not consider that a commitment wording personified to the couple will indicate the seriousness of the commitment that is being made. A serious fixed wording once being publicly declared can actually make the couple feel embraced and drawn to each other.

Consultation Question 44:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Provided we are referring to all other preliminaries other than the wording of the essential commitment quick should be a set wording.

Consultation Question 45:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

I see no reason why not.

Please share your views below:

I have no objection for biblical wording to be allowed where it is fitting to introduce this.

Consultation Question 46:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

It is unnecessary.

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The open Door policy confirms that a wedding is a part of the public community's interest. It might be a warning to a possible rival for the lady. It can also be a safeguard against a forced marriage.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The law needs to be clarified. Many churches like mine do not have a resident appointed registrar and need to engage the council registrar. This needs to be recognised in law.

I have a concern that if weddings were allowed to be held anywhere that unsuitable venues could be used which would obliterate the seriousness of the commitment being made. The law in my opinion should ensure that dignity and discipline in the ceremonies are preserved.

in the air, and/or, in private homes.

Please share your views below:

Not in the air as a person would find it difficult to keep their attention on what was taking place.

Not in a private home which is not at the same time open to the public and subject to the Open Doors' policy.

Consultation Question 49:

No

Please expand on your answer:

I think the Open Door policy should apply here too.

Consultation Question 50:

Yes

Yes

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

I consider the belief or non-belief of the couple is what is important in building the marriage. It can be any suitable building that can reflect the seriousness of the occasion.

Consultation Question 51:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Assuming the officiant has received training so he can make a sound judgement. However, there should still be a procedure for considering any poor judgement by the officiant.

Consultation Question 52:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes absolutely. Marriage between two people is a serious personal affair even though it has public implications, therefore the ceremony should be carried out in a safe and dignified manner.

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

After this consultation has been considered it should be carefully considered and suitable advice and guidelines drawn up to help those taking judgements.

Consultation Question 53:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

A pre-approval may well be a good idea to pick-up knowledge of what is required under the regulations.

Please share your views below:

Someone pointed by the Registrar General's Department.
It should work by group interviews.

Chapter 8: Registration

Consultation Question 54:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

These are those who are present at the ceremony.

Consultation Question 55:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes. The language is not what is important, but the meaning it carries is.

Consultation Question 56:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

That is the way things are going and such arrangements are normally satisfactory.

Chapter 10: Validity and offences

Consultation Question 57:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

This needs to be the case otherwise the requirement would be deemed unnecessary.

No

Please expand on your answer:

On the country I think a failure to register a marriage and/or sign the register should make the marriage void.

Consultation Question 58:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

These factors are vital to a wedding ceremony.

Consultation Question 59:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

The requirements would constitute a marriage.

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Living together does not have meant the couple have made a commitment. They may only be wanting some comfort or convenience.

Consultation Question 60:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Unnecessary.

Consultation Question 61:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Obviously wrong and should be made an offence.

Chapter 11: Special types of wedding

Consultation Question 62:

Please share your views below:

I think it is up to the couple concerned even if the marriage has serious limitations.

Consultation Question 63:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

A good idea to think through the implications with somebody else who could be wise and helpful.

Consultation Question 64:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

If it is needed to make things simpler without losing the benefits promoted earlier, that is fine.

Consultation Question 65:

No

Please expand on your answer:

If a marriage is a covenant between two people it cannot be for a limited duration. It has to be called something else. An agreement or a contract or a specially formulated name.

Consultation Question 66:

No

Please expand on your answer:

If a marriage is a covenant between two people it cannot be for a limited duration. It has to be called something else. An agreement or a contract or a specially formulated name.

Yes on a cruise ship if suitable accommodation could be made available and a registrar is able to be present.

Consultation Question 71:

No

Please expand on your answer:

I agree that suitable accommodation and arrangements could be made on a cruise ship but the name on a officiant should be stated as a witness.

Consultation Question 72:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Provided suitable training of independent officials is given and that the earlier stated safeguards are in place an a suitable place is granted for the ceremony to take place.

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Certainly. It is just as necessary on board ship as anywhere else.

Yes

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

It MUST not be possible for the nonsense of someone to get married without being present at the ceremony as simply signing the marriage schedule is inadequate.

The current situation requires couples to publicly declare their marriage not say nothing or anything they like. The current situation is flexible and reflects the seriousness of the LIFE CHANGING commitment in society and the couple are therefore aware of what they are undertaking rather than not clear. This is a commitment and both people should freely consent to the this serious ceremony.

Marriage ceremonies are not pick and mix because the union needs to be understood by themselves, the society and the law, so the current situation is public not a private matter.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Marriage is serious and solemn and the current ceremony reflects this this is not about what an individual couple wants but is a public declaration and the ceremony and venue need to reflect this.

I agree with the proposed duty, but do not agree that it is sufficient. Officiants should have a wider scope of responsibility that ensures the marriage contains sufficient content & thrust of the legal ceremony. Thereby upholding the dignity & solemnity of marriage.

Definition needs to be provided by the proposals of the meaning of dignity & solemnity. The Consultation viewing ceremonies taking place "in the air" as being compatible with these tests, gives the impression they are easy standards to meet.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Allowing marriage with just a signature & without the need for attendance, makes the process of marriage a mockery. If anyone is intentional on submitting themselves to another through the ceremony of marriage, the least they can do is turn up for it.

Couples would be able to say anything they like or nothing at all. This is a dynamic shift from the much praised public declarations always considered foundational to the legal marriage ceremony.

This just makes the whole ideal of marriage a non-committal event, and bringing into question, why the actual need for it if it so watered down?

Moreover, the Wedding event as it stands has more than enough flexibility. Couples can already add to them if they wish

It should be a no-brainer that certain vows are an essential part of a marriage ceremony. After all how else are they to distinguish the act of coming together in such a profound way to show their commitment to each other?

To try & suggest these and other such vital elements of marriage should be cast aside so that couples are able to completely personalise their ceremony perhaps comes from those that don't fully understand marriage, or maybe those that wish to undermine its solemnity for whatever reason. Whichever they should be thwarted with much vigour.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

To allow such a proposal to proceed takes away vital elements that give seriousness and solemnity to marriage.

The main aspects of a marriage ceremony should be maintained to retain its dignity & authority. Therefore meddling with it should not be allowed, as anything that detracts from the seriousness of the occasion could somehow diffuse the real solemn intent of the marriage.

Also bear in mind the Wedding is a venue where a serious declaration is made in public.

Weddings are public declarations. Apart from the historical requirement to prevent forced marriages, which is still an issue. It would signify the false narrative that marriages are private affairs.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Again consider the seriousness and solemnity of a marriage ceremony. Venues should not simply be allowed because marrying couples want them, but because they are appropriate places to hold such a significant ceremony.

There maybe some specific benefits in a wider variety of venues being allowed for legitimate reasons, but this should not be used to legitimise inappropriate settings.

Consider again the seriousness of the wedding ceremony, and when one does, it seems ludicrous to allow it to be held in anything but a serious venue.

This would leave much ambiguity as to what is considered safe & dignified. What one person may call dignified could be quite the opposite to another ones view. Therefore testing for safety & dignity leaves a lot of open-ended questions.

I would urge stringent requirements to be the standard for the serious act of marriage.

Congratulations on making the beautiful God given right to be married in a Church with one's family around them, and friends, so difficult. And yet children can be stuck in a small classroom, 30 at a time. But the sanctity of marriage is considered below that of a school lesson.

Chapter 5: Officiants

Consultation Question 19:

Consultation Question 20:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Many churches rely on civil registrars to register weddings, as they do not have their own authorised person.

For some this might be because they hold weddings infrequently and are therefore less familiar with the legal requirements. For others it is felt impractical to have an authorised person, perhaps because the church is small or does not have a minister.

One of the Law Commission's goals is that "the ceremony that is meaningful to the couple should be recognised by law". This can happen at the moment in churches that do not have an authorised person, by having a civil registrar to register the marriage. If this is not possible, many couples who attend such churches are likely to require a civil ceremony separate to their church wedding.

The consultation points out that around half of places of worship registered for weddings do not have a person authorised to conduct weddings. Many of these will be churches, who are able to conduct weddings at the moment but will not be able to under the proposals unless they appoint an authorised person.

This idea poses a danger of some churches falling foul of weddings law, as they are required to take responsibility for unfamiliar legalities in order to hold a religious ceremony.

Contrary to public policy or morality is too subjective an assessment. It would risk those with unpopular but entirely legal views being excluded from nominating officiants.

The test should focus on objective criteria. These could include promoting purposes that are illegal or support illegal activity (such as terrorism), that advocate the violent overthrow of democracy, or that undermine the rule of law.

Consultation Question 27:

Please share your views below:

Consultation Question 28:

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 29:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Currently, wedding officiants are either highly trained registrars or religious representatives who are likely to have strongly-held beliefs on marriage.

Allowing independent officiants would open the door to those who may not place such a high value on marriage. Independent officiants (known as 'celebrants') can currently conduct weddings that are not legally binding. These have included ceremonies underwater, in a sadomasochism dungeon, at a comic book convention with a couple dressed as fictional characters, and at a ruined leper hospital on Hallowe'en. Another involved a couple dressed as hedgehogs. Such ceremonies could be legally binding if independent officiants were allowed, undermining the dignity of marriage.

One reason couples might choose independent officiants is because they have been refused the religious ceremony of their choice. This might happen where a couple's beliefs or behaviour are not consistent with the religion they choose for the wedding. Having an independent officiant conduct a pseudo-religious ceremony could misrepresent the religious group's position on, for example, same-sex marriage. Or there might be beliefs from more than one religion brought into a single ceremony, giving a distorted picture of all the faiths involved. Currently there is no financial incentive to officiate a wedding. Opening up a market for independent officiants makes wedding vows a commercial concern. Those more willing to be flexible with the ceremony would be likely to profit the most, encouraging people to push the boundaries. This also risks defeating the goal of reducing costs of wedding venues, which was one of the stated aims the Government gave the Law Commission in 2018. A recent study found that most independent celebrants would give couples very little restriction in what they could include in their ceremony – even where the content "clashed with their personal religion, beliefs or values". This sets the bar extremely low for the seriousness of the wedding, and it is unclear what safeguards or training would be in place.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The prescribed words form a foundation for the declarations that are required for a marriage. Without them the wedding ceremony can be as meaningless as a couple or officiant chooses, and legal marriage can become nothing more than a certificate from the Government. Marriage is founded on solemn promises made between two parties. Under these proposals it would be possible to have a legally recognised wedding in which no words were said between the couple, let alone promises of any kind. The commitment made in marriage must be taken very seriously, and without the prescribed words it is much easier to treat the ceremony casually. The prescribed words are only a small part of the entire wedding ceremony. The rules are already extremely flexible about what happens in the rest of the ceremony. It is hard to imagine a genuine wedding in which the prescribed words could not be included at some stage. Allowing wholly personalised wedding ceremonies without any legally-required words would send the message that marriage is an entirely private matter.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

It is far more important that a legal wedding ceremony reflects the seriousness of the commitment the parties are making than that it is personalised to the couple.

Non-legally binding ceremonies can already be as personalised as people want. These have included ceremonies underwater, in a sadomasochism dungeon, at a comic book convention with a couple dressed as fictional characters, and at a ruined leper hospital on Hallowe'en. Another involved a couple dressed as hedgehogs. Personalisation will damage the dignity of the wedding ceremony. A requirement for officiants to ensure that the ceremony does not undermine the dignity and solemnity of marriage is too subjective. It will not prevent couples finding an officiant to agree to even the most outlandish wishes. The possibility of fully-tailored wedding ceremonies will encourage commercialisation. Those more willing to be flexible with the ceremony would be likely to profit the most, encouraging people to push the boundaries. If people can entirely customise their own weddings, they might blend together different elements from faith ceremonies inappropriately, effectively making a parody of those ceremonies. This could be highly offensive to people of those faiths.

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

You should state that the 'open doors' requirement is a valuable part of wedding day celebrations, making it clear that marriage is not a private affair, but rather is important to society as a whole. The opposite is also important; weddings which are not publicly accessible make a statement that the marriage is private and of interest only to the couple. This couldn't be further from the truth. Ensuring that weddings are open to any member of the public, rather than just those invited, is a way of protecting against forced marriage and bigamy, for example.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

It is unclear what safeguards will prevent unsuitable venues being used. How will the dignity of such ceremonies be guaranteed? The consultation states that venues would need to be 'dignified' and 'safe', but lacks precision on what this means or how it will be tested. Venues must not detract from the solemn occasion of the wedding. The Law Commission has made it clear it sees no objection to weddings "in the air", suggesting that the terms 'dignified' and 'safe' could be interpreted very broadly. Unofficial weddings have been conducted underwater, in a sadomasochism dungeon, at a comic book convention with a couple dressed as fictional characters, and at a ruined leper hospital on Hallowe'en. Such settings clearly trivialise marriage. The law must not allow such venues to host legally binding ceremonies.

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

If one is religious, then a religious place of worship is in line with the faith of both the venue and the people getting married. However, if one does not have a faith and just likes the look of a church, this disrespects the faith behind that church or other faith place and thus non-religious belief weddings should not be allowed to occur there. If one is religious and wishes to get married outside of a church, but a faith 'vicar' is taking the religious ceremony, I feel that is acceptable.

Chapter 1: Introduction

Consultation Question 1:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

I've been legally married for 27 years but I've been a humanist wedding celebrant for 2.5 years, so the wedding ceremonies I deliver are not legally recognised. My couples have to do the legal part separately.

Other

Please expand on your answer:

I always explain to couples at the time of booking that humanist wedding ceremonies are not legally recognised in England and Wales and that they would need to have a registrar do the paperwork after a short ceremony for the marriage to be recognised in law.

No

Please expand on your answer:

All my couples choose to have a humanist ceremony because they want a personalised ceremony that reflects them as a couple and their non religious values, and they want it delivered by someone with the same world view and beliefs as them. So far, all of them have elected to have a civil ceremony too, just to have the paperwork legally recognised. They would all have preferred to have their humanist ceremony legally recognised so that everything is done within the same ceremony, but their choice for a humanist ceremony wins through on the day because of the nature of the humanist ceremony.

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Two of my couples have experienced difficulties with registrars who have tried to dissuade them from having a humanist ceremony, saying they were not allowed to have a humanist ceremony before the legal ceremony. This resulted in my couples being deeply stressed and I had to phone the registrar in question at [REDACTED] Register Office and speak to the Head Registrar to clear up the confusion - at which point the registrar contacted the bride to apologise.

Consultation Question 2:

Please share your views below:

The fact that humanist ceremonies are not legally recognised presents barriers to my couples having a wedding ceremony that is meaningful to them, conducted by a celebrant who shares their beliefs, in a place that is meaningful to them, with others to witness their public commitments to each other. It is discriminatory. The civil ceremony does not enable the couple to express their values or beliefs in a ceremony that reflects their views, their story or their love.

Consultation Question 3:

Please share your views below:

I have had 26 wedding ceremonies postponed this year, and have only carried out 6 ceremonies due to the Covid restrictions.

The fact that humanist ceremonies are not legally recognised has presented more problems than civil or religious ceremonies as it means that couples have had to arrange two ceremonies.

The weddings that I have carried out this year have been intimate, highly personalised and story-led, with lots of focus on humanist values, and this has been incredibly important to the couples and their families.

Chapter 5: Officiants

Consultation Question 19:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

The celebrant should be able to do this on his/her own without the requirement of another officiant/registrar

Consultation Question 20:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Humanist celebrants and religious ministers should be able to cover the signing of the register at a wedding ceremony without the requirement of a registration officer.

Consultation Question 21:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

I agree. I don't see why a registration officer should need to officiate as well as the celebrant or minister.

Consultation Question 22:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 23:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

I agree. Recognition of marriages should not be based exclusively on the buildings in which they take place as this discriminates against couples with humanist beliefs. Humanists UK do not have places of worship as humanists do not worship. We have a world view that is not religious.

Consultation Question 24:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Humanists do not teach others how to live their lives and so therefore the sole purpose of our weddings is not to advance our belief system. It is to marry two individuals who share the same belief system. Humanists are free thinkers who share non religious values and morals that come from within.

I think that the beliefs of any belief organisation (or religion of any religious organisation) should attain a certain level of seriousness, cohesion and importance; be worthy of respect in a democratic society, be compatible with human dignity; and not conflict with the fundamental rights of others – as per wider case law around human rights, and the Equality Act 2010.

Please share your views below:

Organisations and individuals registered to officiate marriages should have a belief in humans, human rights, ethics, morals, they should stand up for equality, be part of an organisation that shares a belief system and they should also agree that marriage and family are an important aspect of living in our communities.

Consultation Question 25:

No

Please expand on your answer:

I don't agree that the belief organisation needs to meet regularly at a specific location.

I think it would be better if there was a local route, and a national route, which is controlled and headed up by a national belief organisation - to ensure the required standards of training, delivery, ongoing CPD and professionalism. This would also enable couples to choose a celebrant who shares their beliefs to conduct their marriage ceremony in any location that is meaningful to them - whether this is outdoors or indoors.

Consultation Question 26:

Please share your views below:

I believe that in theory this would work, but "unlawful" or "contrary to public policy or morality" could have differing views as policies change. (I believe that officiants should abide by common decency laws taking into consideration kindness, equality and human rights - for example humanists have always supported the changes in law to allow same sex weddings and abortions.

Consultation Question 27:

Please share your views below:

Yes

Consultation Question 28:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 29:

No

Please expand on your answer:

I don't believe this would work as it would open up a market for an influx of independent celebrants who would be in competition with civil ceremony registrars, and many of these celebrants may not adhere to the same quality or level of dignity or professionalism as someone from an established belief system that has been training wedding celebrants for decades. This would also put pressure on the GRO to ascertain training and delivery standards of independent celebrants and ensure the ongoing quality and professionalism of independent ceremonies, officiated by individuals that do not belong to a dedicated world view / belief system.

Humanist celebrants undergo intensive training by Humanists UK to a high standard, are engaged in a collective, supportive community, we pay fees to Humanists UK on a quarterly basis, we are regularly peer reviewed to ensure consistent quality and we receive regular training, support and ongoing continued professional development.

Consultation Question 30:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

I agree.

Consultation Question 31:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 32:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

I believe that the fee for a ceremony written and delivered by a humanist celebrant should reflect the time spent on the planning, script writing and delivery, as well as the skill level of the celebrant. The fee should also be reflective of the geographical location of the wedding. The cost of living is higher in some areas than others.

The wedding ceremonies that I write and deliver typically take around 4 days of work per wedding. This is due to the extensive planning process, the bespoke nature of the script written for each and every couple, the time spent on administration and continued communication with the couple in between the booking and the wedding date, marketing of services in order to secure bookings, the cost of printing, hardware and software and the time spent at the ceremony venue on the day. We have paid fees for our training, and we are only accepted onto the training course in the first place if we can demonstrate we have the right skills, experience and beliefs to write and deliver weddings, communicate well and be respectful of all humanist values, our professional obligations and the expectation of our couples.

Humanist celebrants are not paid by Humanists UK. Unlike religious ministers or council officiants, humanist celebrants operate independently within the framework and community of Humanists UK, and we represent Humanists UK. We also pay a levy to Humanists UK which affords the running of our training and support system. Many of us have marketing costs in addition, as well as clothing, computer, phone, ongoing CPD and transport costs. Many of our weddings are in places that are miles away from our homes.

Therefore, whilst we work within a fee structure that is proposed by Humanists UK, our fees are reflective of all of the above.

Consultation Question 33:

No

Please expand on your answer:

I don't agree that independent celebrants should be given legal recognition of their wedding ceremonies. If they are given legal recognition, this route would potentially leave couples open to exploitation.

Consultation Question 34:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

I believe that officiants should be aligned to one organisation only, for clarity.

Consultation Question 35:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 36:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

I believe that the GRO should give guidance as to what elements should be covered, and in terms of the legal process and requirement, but not so much the content. Humanist wedding ceremonies, whilst adhering to the humanist belief system, are entirely bespoke and different for each couple. That's why they are so personal and memorable.

Consultation Question 37:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

I believe that in the case of humanist celebrants, this is right because I know that our network of celebrants is continually monitored for quality, however if the GRO is concerned about any individual celebrant, it should be able to take up the matter with Humanists UK.

Consultation Question 38:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 39:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

I think this would be incredibly difficult to police as there would be an influx of independent celebrants who, after initial training, may not be aligned to any particular belief group. It would potentially also open up the market for many other training organisations that may not train celebrants to the required quality.

Consultation Question 40:

No

Please expand on your answer:

I think that once training has commenced, that an officiant should be authorised within a certain time frame.

Consultation Question 43:

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 44:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 45:

No

Please expand on your answer:

I think that couples who are religious or follow a belief system should be officiated by a member of their belief organisation. I do not think that civil ceremonies should be allowed to have religious content as this muddies the water. The State should not deliver any ceremony that is aligned to any belief system. It should be entirely impartial, and religion and belief free. The civil ceremony conducted by a registrar (government or council official) should focus on the legal aspect of the marriage. Also, if a registrar or independent celebrant was allowed to lead prayers in an official capacity in a marriage ceremony and this celebrant did not follow the belief system, it would not be right or fair to religious organisations.

Civil ceremonies (and if independents are given legal recognition) should definitely be religion free, belief free and entirely secular.

Humanist marriage ceremonies should remain free of religion unless a song or reading by someone other than the officiant (that does not require an act of worship) is included for sentimental reasons and is not focused on the religious aspect (for example the inclusion of the song "Halo" [REDACTED], or another lyric in a popular song that is not religious, or "Jerusalem" by someone who was heavily involved in the WI.)

Also humanists use candles for some rituals - which civil ceremonies disallow - and we can refer to other traditional wedding rituals such as glass smashing or flower ceremonies - which have a history in religious culture, but are carried out in humanist ceremonies with secular or humanist intention and words.

I also believe that couples of the same or different faiths, cultures or beliefs should be allowed to marry in a religious ceremony of their choice if they want religious content, or choose a humanist ceremony if they agree with humanist beliefs and values or a civil ceremony that does not include religion if they want an entirely religion and belief free marriage ceremony.

Please share your views below:

There should not be any religious content in civil weddings.

Part of the reasons why couples choose weddings officiated by someone with the same belief as them is that the officiant and the location of their ceremony holds meaning.

For those with religious belief, it is often the place of worship, the way of life of their officiant and even the ceremonial dress, traditional props and other ideals that hold great meaning. The ceremony would not hold the same value if religious content was delivered in a secular setting by an officiant that has not been trained by, accredited by or who is not part of that religious organisation on a professional level.

There should not be humanist content in a civil marriage ceremony that is not conducted by an accredited Humanists UK officiant.

Consultation Question 46:

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Weddings are slightly different to funerals in terms of public access. A humanist wedding is often quite a personal affair, and the guests have been invited to witness something very unique and bespoke - personal promises and a love story. It is unlikely that the couple would relish anyone other than those on their guest list to witness this personal information. Also, if a ceremony was taking place in the home or garden of the couple, this would not be appropriate.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Please share your views below:

The location of a wedding ceremony should be meaningful the couple - wherever that may be - as long as it is safe for all concerned, appropriate to their story and their belief, and dignified - and answers to previous questions should be taken into consideration regarding religious , humanist and civil weddings to curb the springing up of a multitude of commercially focussed celebrants.

Please expand on your answer:

Yes - this would make sense as registrars are able to carry out a higher number of ceremonies if they are held at register offices. If registrars are required to officiate a wedding outside of the register office, this takes extra time in terms of travel and set up, as well as having to reduce the number of civil ceremonies able to take place in one day.

Chapter 13: The potential impact of our proposals

Consultation Question 85:

Please share your views below:

Yes - the current law definitely prohibits humanist marriage.

Some of my couples have given up on their original wishes for a humanist ceremony because they cannot afford two sets of fees, or because they want the legal part carried out on the same day as the humanist ceremony and costs are prohibitive for a registrar to come out to the venue as well as their humanist celebrant.

The number of humanist wedding ceremonies in Scotland has increased dramatically since they became legally recognised. And this is now also happening across Northern Ireland.

With the 2020 situation of postponements due to Covid 19, legalising humanist marriage ceremonies early in 2021 would enable many more wedding ceremonies to take place at many different venues. This would reduce the backlog and additional costs for the GRO and local councils, and it would hugely benefit couples, humanist celebrants, venues and all other suppliers to the wedding industry throughout England and Wales. Of course, it would also have an impact on those with humanist belief, that their values, ethics and morals were not discriminated against, as it would seem under the current law.

Consultation Question 86:

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

1. The current availability of a basic legal civil ceremony is very low, especially now, because of the Covid-19 backlog and advance bookings into 2022.
2. The cost of marrying on approved premises is detrimental to couples having to pay excess fees to the venues, and also to venues having to provide covered structures in their gardens in order to hold civil ceremonies legally.
4. The cost of marrying in locations not authorised for weddings is detrimental as the couple has to go through two ceremonies - one legal, and one not legally recognised.
5. The necessity of having a separate legal wedding is discriminatory to those with humanist beliefs. And the cost of two ceremonies is unfair.

The joy of having humanist ceremonies approved for legal recognition would be enormous. It would have a huge impact on couples in terms of being able to have the wedding ceremony that reflects them as a couple. It would increase the number of weddings in the UK across the board - opening up the economy and becoming in line with Scotland, Northern Ireland and the Channel Islands, which already have legal recognition.

Chapter 5: Officiants

Consultation Question 19:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 20:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This could have an adverse effect on meaningful Independent Church weddings, where I believe the lawful contract of a marriage should be officiated and made legal for the couple involved. To ignore this could result in unnecessary complications about holding a preferred wedding in a Church. Many churches will not be able to appoint an authorized person, which may then rule them out of holding weddings in the future.

Consultation Question 26:

Please share your views below:

Due to the rise of secularism and contrary to public policy or morality, this would clearly result in a too subjective an assessment. There could be a risk of those with unpopular, but entirely legal views, being excluded from nominating officiants. The test should focus on objective criteria. These could include promoting purposes that are illegal or support illegal activity and undermine the democratic rule of law.

Consultation Question 27:

Consultation Question 28:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 29:

No

Please expand on your answer:

It is surely important to maintain very high standards for officiants and not allow the opportunity to introduce much lesser standards that may belittle or pour contempt on the sanctity of marriage or its legality in society at large. Strongly held views on marriage should remain an essential element for any future officiant, as it appears to be at the moment. A wedding should be an enjoyable, but serious and lawful occasion for the couple and their family and friends, but allowing independent officiants, could open the door to all kinds of no-traditional events, even the macabre. I believe there have already been a number of non-legally binding weddings, with celebrants officiating, where this has been the case!

Consultation Question 30:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Unless there is suitable training, achieving a set competence level and assessment interview, as often takes place in many of the applications for membership of professional Institutes.

Consultation Question 31:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Subject to suitable 'formal' training, achieving a set competence level and assessment by interview.

Consultation Question 32:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 33:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This is too subjective, is it meant to open the door for 'anything goes' provided the legal aspects are included. The values and beliefs of the officiant should never be subject to the accusation of a 'conflict of interest.' Any variation in the fees charged would clearly need to be reasonable in light of the couples requirements and agreed by a legal binding contract for services provided.

Consultation Question 41:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

This is standard practice in most professional fields of employment today.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

A couples commitment to marriage should be public and include both declarations and solemn promises that are meaningful and binding in law. A casual or more private approach to these declarations or wordings could cause marriages to get off to a weak start and result in many sham marriages that last even less time than do at present. There are the expenses of a wedding, the parents, children and wider families to also consider here as a well.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

It is my belief that all weddings should be serious in form and ceremony, but an enjoyable affair for the couple and family involved. The personalization of the wedding can quite simply happen around the core legal aspects. We should not allow weddings to become an 'anything goes' or undignified affair! We must also be aware of profiteering by the more unscrupulous officiants, who are too willing to agree to anything at a price!

Consultation Question 44:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 45:

No

Please expand on your answer:

I do not agree that this should be condoned, it is tantamount to having it both ways in my humble opinion.

Please share your views below:

I can think of no justifiable examples.

Consultation Question 46:

No

Please expand on your answer:

A citizen desiring to legally marry a foreign partner in this country, then hold a religious service elsewhere, should always be permitted, especially for the sake of the family on both sides and somewhat due to modern life patterns.

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Marriage should always be a public 'open doors' affair. It is not a private ceremony, unless the couple have good reason to make it so. There is a danger of someone being 'forced' into marriage or for 'bigamy' to take place if this is repealed.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

If we simply consider many of the unofficial weddings that have taken place, in some very strange venues and places, then we must surely realize that this could open the door to many problems. Marriage must be conducted with dignity and seriousness, it is not a joke and it is not an area for light-hearted attitudes to reign! It would concern me as to how safety and safeguards can be assured if we allow such a provision.

Consultation Question 50:

No

No

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Any of these scenarios would be subject to agreement by the various organizations and authorities involved. There may be odd occasions when a civil wedding may form part of a religious wedding ceremony. There may be an odd occasion where a religious body may need the use of a larger venue, such as a school or community hall due to limited space available. I cannot understand why any non-religious belief wedding would want to use a religious venue, so prohibiting this would certainly help to prevent a conflict in the law on such matters.

Consultation Question 85:

Please share your views below:

I see nothing wrong with the current laws on marriage and believe they provide suitable and adequate provision for those couples who want to get married. I do understand that there are 'other parties' who are included in these proposals, of whom I would reluctantly not support in accordance with my faith and beliefs. No doubt these proposals would likely lead to an increase in those 'other parties' getting married as well, but I would not encourage it in any way. To my mind the end does not justify the means!

Consultation Question 2:

Please share your views below:

The wish to include religious and faith elements without a full religious ceremony - especially where there are mixed faiths.
Outdoor ceremonies, ceremonies in meaningful venues and venues that are special to a couple rather than sanctioned by law.
Inclusion of symbolic elements.
True choice over the length, style and content of a ceremony, including readings, poems, songs, and vows.

Consultation Question 3:

Please share your views below:

It has really highlighted the rigidity of the process for registering a marriage.
This is an extremely important element of legal process but it is NOT a meaningful ceremony.
The very restricted registrar led ceremony is not a true and meaningful option for many who do not wish to have a wedding ceremony and marriage solemnised within a formalised religious establishment.
A legal registering of a marriage and a wedding ceremony should be something that is meaningful and personal to the couple, to their core values and their beliefs.

Chapter 4: Preliminaries

Consultation Question 4:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

It seems unnecessary as the notice period should be sufficient in terms of any legal checks or timescales for objection to a marriage.

Consultation Question 5:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Much more flexible and in keeping with the needs of a modern couple. It still seems to offer the same legal safeguards and assurances though.

Consultation Question 6:

seven days; or

Please expand on your answer:

I feel this offers compromise and flexibility without undue delay. It underlines that the couple still need to ensure that they are committed to the legal process.

Consultation Question 7:

Please share your views below:

I think that this year has demonstrated that all manner of interviews can be held remotely and via IG secure video links. I do feel that there would need to be good verification processes and yes, a low threshold for asking for further assurances in the case of suspected sham or forced marriages.

Consultation Question 8:

Please share your views below:

Yes. This sounds as though it will offer a fair and safe option for many UK residents.

Consultation Question 9:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Much more accessible. Much more in keeping with modern day society. You have still considered the appropriate safeguards.

Consultation Question 10:

Consultation Question 11:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Unsure why this would be needed at the point of registration if the couple was still deciding?

Consultation Question 12:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

This would be imperative if we are to fully embrace independent celebrants who may be self employed.

Please share your views below:

Yes indeed. In circumstances such as couple becoming aware of their right to choose an efficient after registering their officiant, feeling that they have not been well served by their original officiant, unexpected circumstances rendering their original officiant unavailable.

Consultation Question 13:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 14:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Unsure.

Consultation Question 15:

Please share your views below:

No. this is very limiting. I would suggest 'may be published ....., but must also be published in the church where the wedding is to take place'

Consultation Question 16:

Please share your views below:

yes. I agree.

Consultation Question 17:

Please share your views below:

Yes. I would view this as a necessary safeguard both legally but in terms of safeguarding vulnerable adults.

Consultation Question 18:

Anglican preliminaries should continue to be recognised as legal preliminaries to weddings officiated by the Church of England and the Church in Wales;
or

Please expand on your answer:

I see no reason why trusted clergy should not be able to continue to undertake the preliminaries.

Chapter 5: Officiants

Consultation Question 19:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

These feel like appropriate responsibilities.

Consultation Question 20:

No

Please expand on your answer:

I think this would limit a couples options. There may be religious institutions or other faith/belief organisations that wish to hold ceremonies and have these ceremonies officiated at by a registration officer.

Consultation Question 21:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

this should be more than sufficient.

Consultation Question 22:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

I'm not sure that I understand their role, training, or experience well enough to comment.

Consultation Question 23:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

This seems to discriminate against other formal organisations which may not be religious or a faith/belief organisation

Consultation Question 24:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Absolutely not. This services ONLY humanists at this point. This marginalises the couples who may wish to have a legally registered marriage officiated at by an independent celebrant who is open to all manner of beliefs and faiths, yet who remains fully committed to the correct legal process and safeguards whilst TRULY celebrating all faiths, religions, and diversities without putting them in just yet another box!

Please share your views below:

Formal, established independent celebrant training bodies such as those represented by the Wedding Celebrant Commission (WCC). These organisations are tested within the wedding industry, have robust and tested teaching programmes and ongoing professional development at their heart. They uphold standards whilst celebrating diversity and the right of the couple to express themselves, their beliefs, their core values.

Consultation Question 25:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Again, this seems to favour only Humanist weddings and to marginalise truly independent celebrants and organisations.

Consultation Question 26:

Please share your views below:

Yes, I would suggest that there still has to be a commonly recognised level of morality and legality to uphold the important and solemn nature of a marriage.

Consultation Question 27:

Please share your views below:

Again, in principle, but as previously also to apply to more than simply non-religious belief organisations.

Consultation Question 28:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Again, in principle, but as previously also to apply to more than simply non-religious belief organisations.

Consultation Question 29:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

This would seem appropriate to me if we could fully understand how the giber Register Office was to moderate it's decision making.

Consultation Question 30:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Again, in principle, but as previously also to apply to more than simply non-religious belief organisations. There would need to be very clear standards that were uniformly applied across all organisations in terms of fitness to practice. I am a registered nurse so fitness to practice is something dear to my heart.

Consultation Question 31:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Again, in principle, but as previously also to apply to more than simply non-religious belief organisations.

Consultation Question 32:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The registering of a marriage is only one part of a wedding ceremony. It should be the case that element of a legally binding wedding ceremony relating to the actual act of registering, should be a standard price itemised in a transparent manner, the rest of what an independent celebrant may include is a couples choice. Prices will reflect this.

Consultation Question 33:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Not sure that I fully understand this question.

Consultation Question 34:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

i can't see how any officiant with integrity could claim to fully represent all 3!

Consultation Question 35:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 36:

No

Please expand on your answer:

I suggest this should be limited to the element of a legal wedding ceremony relating to the legal registering of the marriage only. the proposal is too broad and could potentially marginalises a couples choice of ceremony and ritual.

Consultation Question 37:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 38:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

What would the appeals and adjudication process be?

Consultation Question 39:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

As above.

Consultation Question 40:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Unsure. Supply and demand surely but equally dilatation of quality, standards and adequate monitoring of needs considering. Limitless numbers will be problematic.

Consultation Question 41:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

As a nurse registered with the NMC, we re required to evidence CPD triennially. I would expect the same to be demanded of me as a celebrant with the authority to register legal marriages.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

In principle but once again, it marginalises independent celebrant officiant led ceremonies where there not not be any faith element. The couple will still have beliefs about what marriage is.

Consultation Question 43:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Absolutely - assuming that

Consultation Question 44:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

As long as the safeguards remain.

Consultation Question 45:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Absolutely. this would make the world of difference to couples from different religions where they wish to have a legally binding blended ceremony.

Please share your views below:

Prayers and blessings specific to an individual's religion as a minimum, Communion etc.

Consultation Question 46:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Unclear what this means.

Consultation Question 47:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

These should be private invitation only affairs. Due notice to object has been given in the preliminaries

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

It is outdated to assume that the venue has any standing on the integrity of a legal registering of marriage. It is the legal checks, the preliminaries, and declarations within the ceremony that matter.

in the air, and/or

Please share your views below:

Unless it can be guaranteed that whilst in the air the carrier vessel does not leave English air space?? Ditto ocean based ceremonies.

Consultation Question 49:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

As per my previous answer. I believe these are private events. Public access is not required.

Consultation Question 50:

No

No

No

Please expand on your answer:

I see no reason for these limitations. again, blended faith and religious ceremonies would be marginalised by such rules. i feel it would be for the relevant church to decide who they permitted to officiate at a ceremony on their premises.

Consultation Question 51:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

This seems apt if they re accountable for the ceremony and legal registration.

Consultation Question 52:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

This seems appropriate and within keeping of the gravitas and integrity of the legal registering of a marriage.

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Unsure. Only with due consultation on what would constitute safe and dignified.

Consultation Question 53:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

This seems to be a sensible and efficient move.

Please share your views below:

The registered officiant could nominate venues regularly hosting weddings and put them forward to the General Register Office if this is to be the overarching body.

Chapter 8: Registration

Consultation Question 54:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Seems apt.

Consultation Question 55:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

I believe the couple should have the choice and the option.

Consultation Question 56:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

This sounds sensible.

Chapter 10: Validity and offences

Consultation Question 57:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

This seems reasonable to me.

Other

Please expand on your answer:

It would depend on the extend of the mistakes in the issuance of the schedule and the systems and timescales agreed to correct them before the marriage is rendered unlawful?

if all assurances have been sought in the preliminaries then is there a need for witnesses? people may choose to have them but should they be a legal requirement ?

Consultation Question 58:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

These appear to be appropriate sanctions.

Consultation Question 59:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Unsure. I do feel that it is important in some way that a couple are demonstrating some level of commitment to each other to safeguard against sham marriage but is it i) meaningful in any real way, ii) enforceable?

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

There should still be a legal registering of a marriage where the preliminary checks have satisfied that both parties are truly consenting to this union. a presumption of marriage where no such legal process or safeguard has been undertaken could put this coerced into cohabiting at risk of further exploitation.

Consultation Question 60:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Not sure. Surely capacity to consent should be assessed as part of the preliminaries? If capacity was established then 3 years is ample without exceptional circumstances. An exceptional circumstances rule should be agreed.

(2) a separate fee from other forms of giving notice, set nationally on compassionate grounds at below cost level.

Please expand on your answer:

i feel that there needs to be some level of compassionate compromise here. a officiant would not be forced to take a ceremony so in choosing to do so, they would be agreeing to a fair and compassionately calculated fee appropriate to the difficult circumstances.

Not exclusively the Registrar General. It should extend to the leading trainers of sanctioned training agencies should the law permit independent celebrants as officiants. Perhaps a small fee proportionate to costs to authorise those leading trainers of these organisations.

Chapter 13: The potential impact of our proposals

Consultation Question 85:

Please share your views below:

Yes to both. This year more than ever I have clear evidence of couples feeling frustrated, curtailed, let down by the current marriage law.

I think that if the law was to change, it help couples feel as though within the prescribed law of the land, their voice, their core values, and their beliefs is what they are signing up for. A truly meaningful and personal ceremony, not a process or a template.

Consultation Question 86:

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

I wold say that 25% of my bookings for 2021 are on account of availability of a register office wedding ceremony and solemnisation/legal registration of marriage. As we have worked together that have, without fail, felt delighted at the ceremony and were unable to understand why this option did not have the same standing as a legal ceremony as - direct quote "it is so much more meaningful", "it really celebrates our love and everything that our loved ones love about us", "My family feel it was the best wedding ceremony that they have ever been to".

My first ever wedding ceremony was held at the outhouse of a local pub. A [REDACTED] landmark and one that was dear to the couple. They met there and celebrated all family and significant events there. It was their dear wish to be married there. It would have been even more meaningful had this been their legal registration of marriage too. Sadly, it is not an approved venue so this was not possible, but we have the MOST amazing ceremony with tears, laughter and true meaning. [REDACTED] remain very very happily married and they continue to share pictures of married life with me.

I had a wedding ceremony at the [REDACTED] where the couple had several pieces of very meaningful music that the registrar would not permit within the ceremony - ditto about. We had the most amazing ceremony.

[REDACTED] - beautiful, personal, outdoor or under canvas. A popular local wedding venue yet they can not hold legal ceremonies madness.

I had a wedding this time last year at [REDACTED] where the couple were catholic and Hindu. they wanted to blend and incorporate both religions and faiths. They anted a Polish Vodka ceremony as this was culturally appropriate and they wanted it within the ceremony. It was a very beautiful element and the grooms maternal grandmother led it. It did not incapacitate anybody or undermine the ceremony. It was just beautiful.

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

2020 - I had 23 wedding ceremonies booked. In 2021 I have 24 booked. 24 couples who chose me as an independent celebrant based on their wish to have total control over the content of their wedding ceremony. meaningful ceremonies, choice re: the time, the music, the venue of THEIR special day. Couples who all had to register their marriage outside of the ceremony, but who would have pressed and saved time and money, to do it within the ceremony itself. Couples who respected the law - who wanted to marry legally and with the prescribed rules, safeguards, and required registration , but in a way that was concordant with their core values and beliefs.

As per my prevue answers. I know several venues such as [REDACTED] , where they loose bookings as they can not provide legal marriages.

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it. We would also welcome any data on the size of businesses that are affected by the law or will be impacted under our proposed reforms. :

I believe that with the appropriate safeguards, the venue is the least important element of a legal registration. It is the content and the signing of a legal register that for me is the legally critical element.

Restrictions to venues and the availability of council registrars and religious officiants would be relieved offering flexibility. 25% of my bookings are made because of lack of availability.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The words prescribed in the marriage services of the coe reflect the nature and significance of marriage and should not be a matter of opinion.

The present time honoured words reflect the two essential elements of marriage, that it is a permanent, i.e. that is life long / a commitment for life, also expressed in the words 'till death do us part; and that it is an exclusive sexual commitment, between the two being married and only them.

To change these essential elements (The life long permanence and the sexual exclusiveness) of marriage is to change marriage itself.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

To make the form of ceremony a 'do it yourself' construction is to destroy the time -honoured understanding of marriage that has brought benefit and stability to life in the UK for many hundreds of years.

To make this change would be to weaken one of the foundations of our society.

It would weaken family life.

No

Please expand on your answer:

The benefit of having a publically recognised, commonly understood relationship of life long, sexually exclusive relationship is supported and expressed in the 'public' nature of the wedding ceremony.

To change this would be to weaken an essential element of the marriage relationship.

It would also cause confusion for the friends and family of those who get married.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

It should not be possible for someone to get married without being present at the wedding ceremony. Simply signing the marriage schedule is inadequate.

- Couples would be able to say anything they like or nothing at all. This is a major departure from the public declarations always considered foundational to the legal marriage ceremony.
- Please state that this risks undermining the solemnity of the wedding ceremony and denying the seriousness of the commitment being made.
- You can note that there is already a large amount of flexibility in the wedding ceremony. The prescribed words are minimal and couples can add to them in all sorts of ways.
- It is not very much to ask that some specific phrases are used to show that both people freely consent to the lifetime commitment they are entering into.
- The idea that a couple should be able to completely personalise their ceremony comes from a wrong view of marriage. A wedding is not just about the couple. The couple enter into a union which is understood by society and has been legally defined. So society and the law have an interest in the making of a public declaration. The logic of a wholly self-defined marriage ceremony is for marriage to be decoupled from the law and wider society. Marriage would become an entirely private matter, rather like a personal hobby.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

- I reiterate the need to recognise the seriousness and solemnity of a marriage ceremony. A particular ceremony should not just be allowed because the couple wants it, but because it is appropriate for such a significant event.
- The idea that a couple should be able to choose everything about a wedding ceremony comes from a wrong view of marriage. A wedding is a public declaration in which society and the state have an interest.
- Unofficial wedding ceremonies have included themes such as Alice in Wonderland, James Bond, Lord of the Rings, Game of Thrones, Marvel comics, Beauty and the Beast, Harry Potter, Star Wars and Flash Gordon. One had a 'Woodland Fairy themed ceremony with ponies dressed as unicorns' while another couple dressed as hedgehogs. It is very doubtful that many of these reflected how seriously marriage should be taken.

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The proposal has the potential to undermine the seriousness and solemnity of a marriage ceremony. Venues should not simply be allowed because marrying couples want them, but because they are appropriate places to hold such a significant ceremony.

- There are some specific benefits in a wider variety of venues being allowed (for example churches who do not own their own building), but you should express caution that this should not legitimise inappropriate settings.

- Unofficial wedding ceremonies have taken place in an S&M dungeon, underwater, and at a Comic Book convention with a couple dressed as comic book heroes. Such 'ceremonies' would be completely incompatible with the dignity of marriage

Chapter 4: Preliminaries

Consultation Question 4:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This period is far too short in any case; permanent residence should be part of the commitment. This period should be at least a month to ensure stability.

Consultation Question 5:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Provided that the notice period is increased, not reduced.

Consultation Question 6:

another period of time.

Please expand on your answer:

At least three months, unless circumstances are exceptional (e.g. imminent death of one of the partners). Marriage should be a commitment for life, not convenience. Such a delay will reinforce this message, and should not be an inconvenience.

Consultation Question 7:

Please share your views below:

Remote interviews must be the exception, not the rule e.g. in current circumstances. There are too many cases of coercion in arrange marriages from other traditions that are not consistent with British standards and history.

Consultation Question 8:

Consultation Question 19:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

How does this differ from current requirements? What is the definition of such an officiant?

Consultation Question 20:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

The civil wedding is to meet legal requirements. A church wedding is still, in my view, a requirement for a marriage.

Consultation Question 22:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Why is this constrained to the Anglican churches? Why can a Roman Catholic priest be empowered similarly?

Consultation Question 23:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Non-religious organisations should be considered on a case-by-case basis, as a minimum. I do not believe they should be so empowered.

Consultation Question 24:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Non-religious organisations have no place in marriage, by definition.

Please share your views below:

Consultation Question 25:

No

Please expand on your answer:

These are sects, not religious organisations.

Consultation Question 26:

Please share your views below:

The definition of 'public policy and morality' is a cause of significant concern. This is the start of a slippery slope, and non-religious organisations should be excluded, as noted before. How significant should the promotion of purposes contrary to public policy be? As an example, there are strongly held beliefs that same sex marriage is a total misunderstanding of the definition of marriage, and that partnerships with equal legal rights is a better option, and maintains beliefs. This is a current misunderstanding, and may well change in the future - does this exclude organisations that do not support this misguided present policy? Equally on abortion and euthanasia. This is the start of the slippery slope of totalitarianism.

Consultation Question 27:

Please share your views below:

Yes - it is their position that is the relevant element.

Consultation Question 28:

No

Please expand on your answer:

More bureaucracy...

Consultation Question 29:

No

Please expand on your answer:

How are their beliefs and suitability to be assessed?

Consultation Question 30:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

It is part of their duty in such nominations.

Consultation Question 31:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Partial yes, as the third requirement is open to interpretation and political bias.

Consultation Question 32:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

But how is this to be guaranteed?

Consultation Question 33:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This is a charter for unreasonable behaviour, and for the bypassing of rules for monetary gain.

Consultation Question 34:

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 35:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

The definition of dignity and solemnity need to be clarified. Officials should have a wider responsibility to ensure that the format of the ceremony, and its content, upholds the sacrament of marriage, and its long-term commitment and solemnity.

Consultation Question 36:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Provided that it emphasises the solemnity and dignity of marriage and the service.

Consultation Question 37:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 38:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 39:

No

Please expand on your answer:

There should be no independent officiants - why should such a body of people exist? What is in it for them, other than monetary gain, if they are not part of a recognised organisation?

Consultation Question 40:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 41:

No

Please expand on your answer:

How is this to be measured and monitored? Further unnecessary bureaucracy.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Both parties must be present at the ceremony - simple signature of a document is insufficient. Public declarations should be made verbally at the ceremony - This is a core requirement. The ceremony or service must include specified elements, ideally actual statements. It is not just about the couple's wishes; it is about demonstrating free consent into a lifetime commitment, so the declarations must be public and in a specified format for the ceremony to have validity. There is already significant flexibility; more is not needed.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

As stated before, the form and ceremony should reflect the solemnity of the commitment, and that it is a public declaration in which society (and the state) have an interest. It is not a free-for-all spur of the moment act. There have been many cases of totally irreverent 'ceremonies' that do not reflect the importance of the commitment - this must not continue.

Consultation Question 44:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 45:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

The religious commitment remains the important service, other than for legal requirements, understandably.

Please share your views below:

Consultation Question 46:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Such a service should be permitted - why should this be repealed?

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This is essential to protect against forced marriage. THIS PROPOSAL MUST NOT GO AHEAD TO ASSURE VALID MARRIAGES. The requirement was introduced to guard against such practices, and we are seeing other traditions acting against this, which is not acceptable by British standards.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The venue must be dignified and safe. Accordingly, this must not go ahead.

outdoors,, on inland waters such as lakes or rivers,, in the air, and/or, in private homes.

Please share your views below:

As noted before, this is a solemn commitment, and the venue must reflect this. Accordingly, venues must be limited; a free-for-all is not acceptable.

Consultation Question 49:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Public access is required to meet the requirements of ensuring a true wedding with mutual consent of the parties. Coercion has been seen in marriages, and openness of the venue is a guard against this.

Consultation Question 50:

No

Yes

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Non-religious belief organisations should not form part of this legislation.

Consultation Question 51:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Provided that it meets minimum (defined) requirements to uphold the dignity of marriage.

Consultation Question 52:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Clarity is required on 'dignified', as this is open to interpretation and stringent safeguards are required to maintain the status of marriage.

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

And legal responsibility for the decision should rest with the officiant - to exclude inappropriate locations.

Chapter 5: Officiants

Consultation Question 19:

Not Answered

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 20:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This would risk precluding some churches from having wedding ceremonies as many churches rely on civil registrars to register weddings, as they do not have their own authorised person.

Some churches may hold weddings infrequently and are therefore less familiar with the legal requirements and therefore this idea poses a danger of some churches falling foul of weddings law. For other churches it could be impractical to have an authorised person, perhaps because the church is small or does not have a minister.

Consultation Question 26:

Please share your views below:

The wording “contrary to public policy or morality” is too subjective an assessment. It would risk those with unpopular but entirely legal views being excluded from nominating officiants. Also the test should focus on objective criteria. These could include promoting purposes that are illegal or support illegal activity (such as terrorism), that advocate the violent overthrow of democracy, or that undermine the rule of law.

Consultation Question 29:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Currently, wedding officiants are either highly trained registrars or religious representatives who are likely to have strongly-held beliefs on marriage. Allowing independent officiants would open the door to those who may not place such a high value on marriage.

Couples might choose independent officiants because they have been refused the religious ceremony of their choice. This could happen where a couple's beliefs or behaviour are not consistent with the religion they choose for the wedding. Having an independent officiant conduct a pseudo-religious ceremony could misrepresent the religious group's position on, for example, same-sex marriage. Or there might be beliefs from more than one religion brought into a single ceremony, giving a distorted picture of all the faiths involved.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The prescribed words form a foundation for the declarations that are required for a marriage. Without them the wedding ceremony can be as meaningless as a couple or officiant chooses, and legal marriage can become nothing more than a certificate from the Government. Marriage is founded on solemn promises made between two parties. Under these proposals it would be possible to have a legally recognised wedding in which no words were said between the couple, let alone promises of any kind.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

A requirement for officiants to ensure that the ceremony does not undermine the dignity and solemnity of marriage is too subjective. It will not prevent couples finding an officiant to agree to even the most extreme wishes. If people can entirely customise their own weddings, they might blend together different elements from faith ceremonies inappropriately, effectively making a parody of those ceremonies. This could be highly offensive to people of those faiths.

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The 'open doors' requirement is a valuable part of wedding day celebrations, making it clear that marriage is not a private affair, but rather is important to society as a whole.

Ensuring that weddings are open to any member of the public, rather than just those invited, is a way of protecting against forced marriage and bigamy, for example.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This causes serious concern as it is unclear what safeguards will prevent unsuitable venues being used and therefore how will the dignity of such ceremonies be guaranteed?

Whilst the consultation states that venues would need to be 'dignified' and 'safe', it lacks definition on what this means or how it will be tested. It is important that venues must not detract from the solemn occasion of the wedding.

Chapter 4: Preliminaries

Consultation Question 4:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Our society is being torn apart by marriage being treated as something trivial, which means families are torn apart and children are now considered safer at school than at home. This can all change! But it begins with treating marriage as important, which means it's not at our personal whim. Being resident for seven days prior is one more safeguard against treating marriage casually, but instead being thoughtful, deliberate, and willing to take on all the responsibilities associated with it.

Consultation Question 5:

No

Please expand on your answer:

As above, while it might be a nuisance, having to be present in person recognises that marriage matters to those physically in community: it is NOT a purely personal matter but a very significant social matter. It dignifies the community to require that marriage be openly social.

Consultation Question 6:

another period of time.

Please expand on your answer:

The current 28 days seems sensible and, at the very least, I would not advise against lessening the time. Emotions run rampant and marriage is NOT to be entered into lightly! To permit rushing is to open the door to foolish mistakes, emotional decisions, and abuse.

Consultation Question 7:

Please share your views below:

No. Marriage should matter enough that people make the effort to come in person. This is not like a job interview you can easily quit later. This is supposed to be a relationship for life. Perhaps the more burdensome the requirements, the more seriously people will take it and fewer marriages will end.

Consultation Question 8:

Please share your views below:

Notice should be able to be given for those in the military (and probably other exceptions of which I'm unaware).

Consultation Question 9:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

The more public the better, for the sake of society. Marriage should be open, public and a bedrock of society.

Consultation Question 10:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The Marriage Schedule should be considered a weighty document, not to be trifled with. Making it valid for 12 months trivialises marriage.

Consultation Question 11:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

If the parties want a substitute officiant, they should apply for a different schedule.

Consultation Question 12:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

As long as 'unavoidable delay' doesn't become code for anything at all.

Please share your views below:

No, because this again degrades the significance of marriage.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This is bad for society. Constraints bring order and stability, and prescribed words for a marriage ceremony are one way of bringing order and stability to society. If you can say anything you want, then marriage comes to mean 'anything you want'. The point is that marriage is NOT some personal decision: it is a social institution that you make a personal decision to enter INTO. You choose to enter into a socially defined relationship, which means there must be initiation rites that mark the before and after. Solemnity and dignity would mean nothing if there were no constraints.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This, too, makes marriage a personal, private matter. For a birthday party, of course! For a marriage, no: there need to be social norms to which every marriage conforms. Otherwise, it's not a marriage.

No

As above, birthday parties can be personal and private, but marriages must not be. A significant social ceremony must have constraints of appropriateness: solemnity and dignity will not be preserved if the wedding can take place anywhere.

Chapter 13: The potential impact of our proposals

Consultation Question 85:

Please share your views below:

The current law discourages most easy, whimsical marriages. The proposals here would encourage more people to take marriage lightly, which means more would become legally married but 'marriage' would no longer have social significance, because it would be so easily to both get married and get divorced.

Chapter 1: Introduction

Consultation Question 1:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Not Answered

Please expand on your answer:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Marriage is a social and not just a personal event. All cultures up until the present have had recognised ways of acknowledging the special relationship of a man and a woman. From an anthropological perspective these include a ritual (the wedding), legal agreement, and an oath sign. Respecting the wisdom of this universal tradition is vital for the continuation of a culture.

From a philosophical perspective the definition is incoherent - the only alternative to a belief in some divinely ordered world is an individualistic and subjective approach that has little or no consistency. 'Secular' is often a negative term allowing those with very different views to counter various beliefs in the divine, and it is difficult to impossible for such groupings to construct a coherent worldview. ## Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

1a Oral and public consent is vital and central to the tradition.

2 This would be a nightmare to police. Instead there should be a set of possible ways of expressing binding commitment.

3. It needs to be a both/and

4. both/and again

The purpose of the ceremony is to reinforce the binding nature of marriage, and this is enabled through multiple reinforcements.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This is impossibly subjective and can easily be subverted to undermine the dignity and solemnity of the marriage service. There should be a set of minimal requirements. There is sufficient flexibility in the present forms.

Chapter 13: The potential impact of our proposals

Consultation Question 85:

Please share your views below:

The nature of postmodern culture makes it increasingly difficult to appreciate and preserve marriage. Any attempts to undermine the safeguards of a wedding, or subvert its dignity and seriousness are to be resisted. Doing so will simply increase the number of sham or fraudulent marriages, and increase the rate of divorce. The weighty laws surrounding marriage also encourage a serious discussion by the two parties about the nature of marriage and its binding character.

Consultation Question 86:

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

The laws have minimal financial demands, compared to what is normally spent on dresses, reception etc. Again, a significant but not excessive cost emphasises the seriousness of the marriage.

Consultation Question 13:

No

Please expand on your answer:

I cannot understand the reason for this. Surely those living in the United Kingdom should be able to have banns published in other episcopal or Anglican churches to enable weddings in England and Wales.

Consultation Question 14:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

If a church is damaged because of war it is unlikely services will be taking place inside it.

Consultation Question 15:

Please share your views below:

Pastorally it is often helpful and informative if banns take place in both churches of the parties to be married.

Consultation Question 16:

Please share your views below:

I agree with number 1, as this potentially clarifies the legality of a marriage.

It is helpful pastorally to meet with the couple before the banns are called. Sometimes, when both parties are known to the clergy this need not be necessary.

Consultation Question 17:

Please share your views below:

This would prove unnecessary in some cases where the couple are known to the clergy.

Consultation Question 18:

Anglican preliminaries should continue to be recognised as legal preliminaries to weddings officiated by the Church of England and the Church in Wales;
or

Please expand on your answer:

To have a civil ceremony first is surely an extra burden, when Anglican churches are able to act as Registrar.

Consultation Question 24:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Please share your views below:

This is difficult. Personally I would prefer that occult and Satanic organisations do not have the right to officiate at marriages. Also Scientology, and freemasonry.

Why is it necessary to widen the scope, when there is already the option to have a civil ceremony with a Registrar?

Consultation Question 25:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 26:

Please share your views below:

This is unclear. The Anglican Church does not believe in gender neutral marriage, and would not want to see the law of the land usurping the law of God.

Wedding fees are already far too high. Anglican fees are far too high.

I would prefer a limitation as to fees, preferably around the £200 mark.

Consultation Question 34:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Agree, as this sounds contradictory.

Consultation Question 35:

Yes

Consultation Question 45:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

This will help fully broaden the substance of civil ceremonies.

Please share your views below:

Scriptures would be helpful, or Christian poetry. Also piped Christian hymnody at the beginning and end.

Consultation Question 46:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Committed Christians who are divorced will prefer a civil ceremony, followed by a service of dedication and prayer after civil marriage. This is what occurred with Prince Charles and Camilla, and should remain as permitted.

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Marriage is not something about which anyone should be ashamed, and open access to the ceremony should be allowed.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This could be open to abuse, and to trivialising the nature of marriage, and cheapening it.
It is advisable to have clear guidelines as to where marriages can take place.

Please share your views below:

An appearance of sensationalising, or a desire to turn marriage into a celebrity or publicity occasion should be resisted.
I would only include the outdoors in the above, within the grounds of a hotel or reception area.

But still think external guidelines should apply.

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 53:

No

Please expand on your answer:

There needs to be tighter regulations.

Please share your views below:

There should not be a free for all. Premises, or the outdoor location should be officially authorised by the local council.

Consultation Question 57:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

No

Please expand on your answer:

There should be safeguards, with witnesses present. A genuine mistake or oversight as regards a signature is different, which needs to be rectified later.

Consultation Question 58:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 59:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This, surely, could result in abuse of marriage, with marriage taking place to enable a settlement in a country, and for marriage to effectively be fictitious.

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 60:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

But with a clear justification within any time frame that consent has not been given. This will enable forced, coercive marriages to be swiftly terminated.

This is an unknown. Not sure whether these proposals will increase the number of those legally married.

Having said that, Anglican fees are far too high, and need to be reduced to somewhere in the region of £200.

Reducing fees across the board may conceivably encourage more marriages.

What will alter everything is a revival of Christian Faith, living in the fear of God, and the recovery of true marriage complementarity, a man and a woman cleaving together for life.

Consultation Question 86:

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

I was Vicar in a parish for almost thirty five years, and was always embarrassed by Church of England fees, and waived them when I possibly could.

Often committed members of a congregation are already tithing, or giving generously, and should not be required to pay anything for the marriage of a son or daughter.

Chapter 13: The potential impact of our proposals

Consultation Question 85:

Please share your views below:

If a couple are serious about getting married and want to commit to each other , they can do so now. By getting more couples to marry rather than co habit will just lead to more divorces. Please don't take away the sincerity of a marriage , it should not be taken lightly, it should be a life long commitment if possible. To trivialise it will be a disaster .

Consultation Question 86:

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

The costs of marriage should not matter if people are serious about a legally binding commitment

Consultation Question 3:

Please share your views below:

One of my nieces got married this year in 2 parts: 1 a registry office part with 4 family members from each side 2 a ceremony with 30 including 6 from each side.

I would like to have attended despite the quarantine for travelling from abroad. The non-church premises were appropriate for an occasion I consider to have a formal aspect. I found the prepared homily too much associated with just the couple's happiness (not a bad thing) and not with the challenge of the commitment.

Please expand on your answer:

The notion of consent is key here.

It becomes far too open when there is no oral participation by the couple, Or when one member can even be absent, Also when the form of words (even without the 'No impediment' part) is so personalised that there's no expression of commitment. The element of a bond is important which can be recognised objectively by the state and the community

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This means a totally free choice about location which can be taken to extremes and where there is no longer any seriousness in the step being taken. The form of the ceremony is personalised to a degree where private choice is more important than the objective nature of a commitment.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The solemnity of marriage is seriously undermined. It becomes an event based on a novelty consumerist idea.

on inland waters such as lakes or rivers,, in the air, and/or, in private homes.

Please share your views below:

Outdoors in an appropriate location the dignity of the occasion can be maintained. Also the objective community aspect of a commitment. With the others there are 'dangers' on both counts.

Anglican preliminaries should continue to be recognised as legal preliminaries to weddings officiated by the Church of England and the Church in Wales;

Please expand on your answer:

I think this should pertain still, as long as the state is behind as legal guarantor

Chapter 5: Officiants

Consultation Question 19:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

seems sensible. I 5=thought it already in place for all weddings.

Consultation Question 20:

No

Please expand on your answer:

What of all the churches that are non conformist or non anglican , where the minister may not have the power to declare the marriage lawful. It would lead to a lot of people getting married having to have two ceremonies for legality.

Moslem and other religions' marriage ceremonies need to conform to British marriage law and so would need an officiant to make sure they comply.

Consultation Question 21:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Never knew that two were needed!

Consultation Question 22:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

I thought this has been the case for many years.

Consultation Question 23:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

As long as the officiant upholds British law on marriage

Consultation Question 24:

No

Please expand on your answer:

It may teach that marriage can be dissolved at one of the partner's whims. This could be highly damaging to the spouse and children. Whether religious or secular marriage must adhere to the National law.

Please share your views below:

Consultation Question 25:

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 26:

Please share your views below:

I don't understand the thinking behind this question. Supposing the state law says that marriage is only for Moslems and Jews which pertains in Mauritania, then no one can get legally married according to Christian custom. If this were to happen in Britain, and an officiant from the Christian tradition was denied the ability to legally solemnise marriage, it would be an evil infringement of our liberties.

Consultation Question 27:

Please share your views below:

I believe there have been dodgy vicars who have performed weddings where the right procedures were not followed and were subsequently jailed. Individuals must be of good character to officiate whatever their office. Character is more important than office.

Consultation Question 28:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

seems sensible. I thought there was already such a list.

Consultation Question 29:

No

Please expand on your answer:

It seems that any Tom, Dick and Harry, could be appointed for this important role. At present those dealing with marriage are highly trained, know the law and generally have a high opinion of true marriage, as being beneficial to society, where marriage is held as a highly honourable estate. Those without thorough training and regard for the high status of marriage, could trivialise it, demean it as is now happening in our cohabiting, non covenanting society. society

Consultation Question 30:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Seems obvious but officiants must comply with British law as it stands

Consultation Question 31:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Age 18 is maybe too young maybe to be uphold the dignity and solemnity of a lasting commitment to the marriage bond.

Consultation Question 32:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

This will come into the dodgy vicar class!

Consultation Question 33:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

I think fees should be fixed rate yearly.

Consultation Question 34:

Not Answered

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 35:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Obvious! But the commission needs to define dignity and solemnity. These are very well defined in the Book of Common Prayer. Its famous vows should be part of every solemnisation of marriage in the modernised version.

Consultation Question 36:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

So long as it does not conflict with recognised vows like , "until death do us part" etc.

Consultation Question 37:

No

Please expand on your answer:

There should be a regulatory body that they can be reported to, as well, so that the law can be enforced and their removal secured.

Consultation Question 38:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Indeed!.

Consultation Question 39:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 40:

No

Please expand on your answer:

They should be authorised within a month or two after vetting, etc

Consultation Question 41:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

This provision might get rid of good people unwilling to accept contrary views on marriage as ia still the case with homosexual marriage.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The state needs to uphold the sanctity, the solemnity, the covenant agreement made between man and woman, for their benefit, for their children's benefit and for the benefit of society. Britain is full of broken marriages, broken homes, easy divorce laws, liaisons that give rise to deserted women, single mothers, single fathers. The government has ceased to back marriages financially. Men in particular have no responsibility to the children they conceive.

The prescribed words are essential to the probity and solemnisation of marriage and should not be undermined in these proposals. Marriage is not a private matter but one that affects the wider society. If it is cheapened it just contributes to misery and brokenness. So allowing personalised words which require no firm commitment to each other, just makes marriage pointless.

It seems also that the persons might not even have to attend a ceremony with one just signing the marriage schedule! This makes a mockery of the whole business.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

marriage is such an important institution that personal preferences must not allow it to be trivialised and undermined. The state itself needs to uphold the importance marriage has to the wider society and to the children born of the union. So the wedding itself needs to be public, so that good marriage law is maintained[ no forced marriages of old men to young girls, bigamists, etc]. It needs the solemnity of the proscribed words and venues to be such as uphold its dignity, wonder and solemnity. Getting married in hot air balloons, dressed as hedgehogs, etc trivialises the ceremony and the law commission should not approve whacky personal whims or undignified venues.

Consultation Question 44:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

AS long as they include the prescribed wording according to Biblical standards.

Consultation Question 45:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

with the proscribed words and solemnity

Please share your views below:

Consultation Question 46:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

I don't know all the provisions of this act . If it was good for my parents ,it has been good for me and vast numbers of the happily married. I don't think it should be repealed to please the LGBT lobby if that is what is intended.

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The public need to scrutinise what is going on and this is a safeguard to promote true marriage. Forced marriage is a great issue in British society, sadly, and this open doors requirement reduces that likelihood. There should be no repeal of this essential element of the law.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

A wedding could happen in a lap dancing club, a brothel. Anything goes these days and trivialises an important and solemn ceremony which needs to be done properly at a decent public venue. Marriage law must not pander to the whims and wishes of couples. They may need to be told that its solemnity needs an appropriate dignified venue and will only be conducted in such a place.

Please share your views below:

It needs to be done publicly. I thought captains were allowed to marry people on ships like the QE2. I would not approve of these in private. A nephew of mine was married ,under a canopy on a public beach by a proper, legal officiant, so out of doors -yes, but in public with all legal procedures.

Consultation Question 49:

No

Please expand on your answer:

As stated before

Consultation Question 50:

No

Not Answered

Not Answered

Please expand on your answer:

Having civil and non religious weddings taking place in Christian churches clouds the issue of marriage as only between one man and one woman and is pointless if they do not intend to make their vows permanent and meaningful.

Consultation Question 51:

No

Please expand on your answer:

It will be open to abuse by corrupt officiants.

Consultation Question 52:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This should be laid down in law. The proposals of the law commission are very vague. In Europe, the Town Hall was the one place where legal marriage had to take place. The commission should specify places that are safe and dignified and if there are queries, the local authority could stipulate and advise.

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

If they take into account what has been written previously in my answers.

Please expand on your answer:

Officiants should have a wider responsibility to ensure that the content and tone of the legal ceremony upholds the dignity and solemnity of marriage.

The whole tone of the remainder of this document suggests that marriage will be further trivialised so the very idea that dignity and solemnity of the act of marriage will be upheld runs counter to this theme.

I have no idea if the authors of this document have any understanding of what dignity and solemnity mean. This needs to be defined.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Both parties need to be present.

The existing prescribed words should be kept.

These proposals further trivialise the State's prescribed marriage and should be rejected.

The proposals that couples should invent their own words should be rejected.

These proposals will further lead to the destabilisation of society.

Consultation Question 43:

I think that it's important that you get married somewhere where you are known. It should be somewhere where one of you lives. Marriage is something that is public and should be declared to your community. It's a celebration of love and commitment which is shared with the community you live in.

Consultation Question 24:

Not Answered

Please expand on your answer:

Personally I believe all marriages between a man and a woman should have a religious officiant but that doesn't happen.

Please share your views below:

I feel only churches and registry offices should be places of wedding ceremonies due to the lawful and important ceremony. They do take place in other places and a officiant should be there to ensure all is in order.

I don't feel that any place should be legally allowed for the ceremony. By all means go there afterwards to celebrate.

Consultation Question 26:

Please share your views below:

Religious organisations should be able to nominate their officiant. If people attend a religious place of worship they are happy with the morality ideals of their religion. You cannot and should not place public moral ideas (which change over time) onto religious organisations. People who make laws should be very careful about interfering with religion and morality. People should be able to get married in a religious place, holding their religious views and morality views. Also if a vicar , rabbi or imam doesn't want to marry two people of the same sex he shouldn't have to and should be free to decline.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The couple should both express their consent orally in the wedding ceremony. The vows are solemn and serious and should be expressed as such. The vows should be expressed as they currently are. The officiant should be declaring them married. The signing should take place after the vows have been said.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Anything can be done then and a wedding is something quite formal, serious and legally binding! Vows already can have parts added to make them more personal but the vows are essential to the wedding ceremony!
The seriousness of the ceremony is important and should be seen in the wedding.

Consultation Question 44:

No

The problem comes as what people mean by those words as people interpret words differently.
Safeguards are not in place to protect people when you basically say you can get married anywhere so long as the officiant deems it safe and dignified.

Chapter 13: The potential impact of our proposals

Consultation Question 85:

Please share your views below:

I do not believe that the current law discourages couples from getting married and I believe that the proposed changes will not mean more marriages will take place, I also would have thought that at the current time parliament has more important issues than changing marriage laws

Consultation Question 86:

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

A wedding can be arranged on a small budget if the couple so desire, as was the case in our own family. The cost is entirely the choice of the parties involved

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

I see no benefit to the proposed changes

Chapter 1: Introduction

Consultation Question 1:

No

Please expand on your answer:

I am legally married.

No

Please expand on your answer:

I sought that information before getting married.

Other

Please expand on your answer:

I chose otherwise.

Other

Please expand on your answer:

N/A

Consultation Question 2:

Please share your views below:

From a society and government perspective, preserving marriage provides a strong and powerful component of our social fabric. A healthy marriage should be grounded on serious public commitments that would foster a mutual beneficial relationship whose advantages would extrapolate to the broader community.

Therefore, it is important to have barriers to avoid people approaching marriage in a cavalier manner. It is not a light promise whispered in someone's ear after a few rounds in the pub. It is something designed to tailor their relationship for the unforeseeable future and affect all people around them (not even only immediate family).

Consultation Question 3:

Please share your views below:

It has been awful. We were prevented to attend and witness marriages.

Chapter 4: Preliminaries

Consultation Question 4:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This is a bare minimum. We want healthy marriages to strengthen our communities. If anything this should be increased.

Consultation Question 5:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Again it undermines the seriousness of the commitment.

Consultation Question 6:

seven days; or

Please expand on your answer:

At least.

Consultation Question 7:

Please share your views below:

Not adequate. Perhaps provisionally for the pandemic, but that should be an exception not to be abused.

Consultation Question 8:

Please share your views below:

Not adequate. We want marriages to be regulated locally.

Consultation Question 9:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

As public as possible.

Consultation Question 10:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

I do not have a view.

Consultation Question 11:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

It sounds pertinent.

Consultation Question 12:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Although a substitute must have an understanding of the law, and it should be a public official.

Please share your views below:

Provided he has the appropriate qualifications to officiate, one should be able to carry out his duties.

Consultation Question 13:

No

Please expand on your answer:

If it is pertinent that people are from those regions in the United Kingdom, this should remain valid (example: a Scottish couple working in London).

Consultation Question 14:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 15:

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This completely undermines the weightiness of marriage. This is supposed to be a public commitment and society should be invested in hearing and witnessing both parties in order to appease the solemnity which is required and to nurture a stronger sense of their impact in the community.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

A marriage is a serious engagement and not an event to be taken lightly. It is a serious commitment where two people are willing to take public vows to be concerned with each other for the sake of both, the community and the state.

Consultation Question 44:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

If it is civil, it should be governed by civil law. If it is religious, likewise by religious arrangements.

Consultation Question 45:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Please share your views below:

Reading of Scripture, Religious Music

Consultation Question 46:

No

Please expand on your answer:

These things could be both undertaken to the benefit of all.

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

I strongly disagree. Marriage is a public matter and not a private one. If it is private, just abolish all of these regulations and leave people to their own arrangements. If it is regulated, we must be able to demonstrate the value of it for society and not only the individuals. Marriage promotes stronger and more cohesive societies, diminishes criminality, increases health, fosters better ethics and general perception of happiness and self fulfilment.

Removing the open doors, sends the wrong idea whilst it also incidentally helps to cover abuse in forced marriages and may block impediments not identified in preliminaries to surface - even if it is at the last minute.

Open doors helps to reinforce the idea of the public function of marriage.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Generally people can have their parties wherever they want. Marriage is a solemn event that should be protected for the benefit of all.

Anything that removes weight from this commitment should be discouraged.

Please share your views below:

There should be caution. It is more about the seriousness of the occasion rather than the building itself. It may be better to limit the buildings and have people applying for exceptions provided they have a good reason for that.

Consultation Question 49:

No

Please expand on your answer:

As public as possible.

Consultation Question 50:

No

No

No

Please expand on your answer:

Provided they have an authorisation to use the building.

Consultation Question 51:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Civil Registrar and Churches. Exceptions to be dealt case by case.

Chapter 13: The potential impact of our proposals

Consultation Question 85:

Please share your views below:

I believe the current law is appropriate and it does not prevent people from getting married. We have seen the rate of marriage up from current level with the same law in place. It points to something beyond the law as an aspect of influence and preventing people from getting married.

It is the culture of cohabitation and the undermining of the importance of marriage and not the law.

They seem reasonable and appropriate.

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

It may be a good thing to have more options but one should tread carefully not to undermine the seriousness of the commitment and its benefit to the social cohesiveness of our society. Every individual came from a "marriage" between a man and woman.

Officiants should have a wider responsibility to ensure that the content and tone of the legal ceremony upholds the dignity and solemnity of marriage, but you do need to define what is meant by 'dignity' and 'solemnity'. The consultation seems to view ceremonies taking place "in the air" as being compatible with these tests,

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

It should not be possible for someone to get married without being present at the wedding ceremony. Simply signing the marriage schedule is inadequate.

There should still be public declarations as they are foundational to the legal marriage ceremony.

The proposal risks undermining the solemnity of the wedding ceremony and denying the seriousness of the commitment being made.

There is already a large amount of flexibility in the wedding ceremony. The prescribed words are minimal and couples can add to them in all sorts of ways.

It is not too much to ask that some specific phrases are used to show that both people freely consent to the lifetime commitment they are entering into.

- The idea that a couple should be able to completely personalise their ceremony comes from a wrong view of marriage. A wedding is not just about the couple. The couple enter into a union which is understood by society and has been legally defined. So society and the law have an interest in the making of a public declaration. The logic of a wholly self-defined marriage ceremony is for marriage to be decoupled from the law and wider society. Marriage would become an entirely private matter, rather like a personal hobby.

Consultation Question 20:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This would prevent us performing what is a treasured and valued role amongst the constituency we serve. We have married many attendees, some of who are members of the church, some of who are not.

We and they have rejoiced to hold what is a serious, joyful and meaningful ceremony and to be able to have their marriage vows said before the church friends and family. We rely on a registrar to attend as we have no means of performing this function ourselves.

If we had to take responsibility for this role, we fear our lack of training and experience, could mean that we fall foul of marriage law. We have greatly appreciated the kind help, support and advice of our local registrar on many occasions.

This idea undermines the seriousness of marriage in that anyone can be nominated to a role from any religious or secular body, to perform that which was previously seen as being so important that an official of the state needed to be involved.

Consultation Question 26:

Please share your views below:

What is the definition of public morality? This is too subjective. We have seen views on all manner of moral issues shift in recent years. If a church holds to a traditional view of marriage, will it eventually be penalised and forbidden access to marriage services, because it holds to a traditional view. This would amount to a form of persecution.

To remove such a subjective view, which could be interpreted differently by succeeding Governments, surely stronger criteria should be adhered to such as organisations that encourage violence and non-democratic methods.

Consultation Question 29:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This would open the door to all manner of innovation and novelty in marriage ceremonies. The result would be, no doubt, the increasing trivialisation of the marriage ceremony and so marriage itself.

Those who applied to be independent officiants would often wish to offer new and more unusual types of wedding ceremonies, so as to gain business. Those who wish to conduct ceremonies whilst "sky diving", underwater or as Halloween characters, can still do so, but cannot have such ceremonies recognised as legally binding. This is how it should remain.

Marriage is a solemn and serious commitment that should not be trivialised and sent up as something akin to a joke.

Consultation Question 30:

Some organisations would have a very wide view as to who is fit and proper and who thus should be put forward.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

We see these prescribed words as essential. They undergird the seriousness of marriage and show publicly how serious a matter marriage is. Again, this is another proposal which wants to relegate the esteem in which marriage should be held. These prescribed words form but a small part of the marriage ceremony. Those we have married have never quibbled at them and have rejoiced to give a public witness as to the veracity of their vows. Why is there any need to change this?

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Many would wish to introduce all manner of novelty and even extreme content into the ceremony, possibly even extreme forms of sexual expression and behaviour. This again would trivialise marriage.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Again there is a great danger here, that things will become trivial. It should remain that venues must be registered, so that extreme and frivolous ceremonies are avoided. Marriage is a serious and lifelong commitment. It seems incongruous that such a commitment could be made whilst water-skiing, sky diving or paragliding, which is what some have done, whilst holding non-recognised ceremonies.

Who is to say what dignified is. Some believe that getting married in fancy dress, whilst wing walking is dignified.

No

Please expand on your answer:

This guidance will have to make a stand as to why a place is or is not dignified, so as to maintain some semblance of seriousness to the marriage ceremony. Why is the law society proposing these changes, when what we have now does this anyway? This again opens the door to trivialisation.

We have never found that the current law discourages marriage. Trivialising marriage will not help increase the number of those who marry, but just undermine the seriousness of it.

We are delighted to see couples marry in a serious and joyful ceremony, where couples acknowledge their responsibilities and the blessings of marriage before God. We have never found the cost of the marriage service (which in our case is very little) hinder folk from marrying. It is more the cost of the reception that incurs greater financial outlay.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

- It should not be possible for someone to get married without being present at the wedding ceremony. Simply signing the marriage schedule is inadequate.
- Couples would be able to say anything they like or nothing at all. This is a major departure from the public declarations always considered foundational to the legal marriage ceremony.
- This risks undermining the solemnity of the wedding ceremony and denying the seriousness of the commitment being made.
- There is already a large amount of flexibility in the wedding ceremony. The prescribed words are minimal and couples can add to them in all sorts of ways.
- It is not very much to ask that some specific phrases are used to show that both people freely consent to the lifetime commitment they are entering into.
- The idea that a couple should be able to completely personalise their ceremony comes from a wrong view of marriage. A wedding is not just about the couple. The couple enter into a union which is understood by society and has been legally defined. So society and the law have an interest in the making of a public declaration. The logic of a wholly self-defined marriage ceremony is for marriage to be decoupled from the law and wider society. Marriage would become an entirely private matter, rather like a personal hobby.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

- A marriage ceremony should be both serious and solemn. A particular ceremony should not just be allowed because the couple wants it, but because it is appropriate for such a significant event.
- The idea that a couple should be able to choose everything about a wedding ceremony comes from a wrong view of marriage. A wedding is a public declaration in which society and the state have an interest.
- Unofficial wedding ceremonies have included themes such as Alice in Wonderland, James Bond, Lord of the Rings, Game of Thrones, Marvel comics, Beauty and the Beast, Harry Potter, Star Wars and Flash Gordon. One had a 'Woodland Fairy' themed ceremony with ponies dressed as unicorns' while another couple dressed as hedgehogs. It is very doubtful that many of these reflected how seriously marriage should be taken

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

- A marriage ceremony is a serious and solemn event. Venues should not simply be allowed because marrying couples want them, but because they are appropriate places to hold such a significant ceremony.
- There are some specific benefits in a wider variety of venues being allowed (for example churches who do not own their own building), but this should not legitimise inappropriate settings.
- This question considers having ceremonies “in the air”, meaning the safe and dignified test doesn’t seem too hard to meet. Would weddings also be allowed in McDonald’s?
- Unofficial wedding ceremonies have taken place in an S&M dungeon, underwater, and at a Comic Book convention with a couple dressed as comic book heroes. It's incompatible with the dignity of marriage for venues like these to host legal weddings.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

No need to remove the declaration of 'no impediments' spoken during the ceremony.

It is already possible for couples to have some choice of ceremony words but it is neither dignified nor solemn to go down the route of 'designer weddings' with whatever words the couple may like.

Yes, it is 'their day' but it is also a significant legal ceremony that is part of our way of life as a society - with all the ensuing implications, rights and responsibilities.

Your proposals - signing declarations but not needing to speak them - almost seem to suggest a business transaction scenario like a house conveyance, without even needing to be present at the ceremony.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Marriage is a serious matter

Yes, it is 'their day' but it is also a significant legal ceremony that is part of our way of life as a society - with all the ensuing implications, rights and responsibilities.

If it is 'open season' for weddings - anyway, anywhere, anyhow it is likely that dignity and solemnity will be vanishing concepts

The 'open doors' principle is a good one making it clear that a ceremony recognised by law is taking place - not secretly, not by coercion but freely entered into by each person.

Wedding are a public act of commitment and celebration.

Please share your views below:

There may well be some 'far out' 'fun' ideas about marriage locations but where do you draw the line if you want to retain the principles of dignity and solemnity? Are we reducing marriage to a 'party'.

It should surely be possible to sensibly licence venues for particular reasons without 'opening the flood gates' e.g. KFC wedding? Wing walking wedding?

Consultation Question 3:

Please share your views below:

This year one of my nieces got married. It was in 2 parts

1 registry office with 4 family members from each side 2. Ceremony in a non-church location with 6 family members from each side, total of 30 present.

I would like to have attended but quaranting for travellers from abroad had begun.

The location lent appropriately to the dignity of the situation but the homily was based too much on the happiness of the couple (not a bad thing in itself of course) rather than the commitment involved.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The notion of consent is the key here.

It's far too open to allow no oral participation from the couple on this point. Or even allow the absence of one member.

When the form of words is personalised more freely than at present, choice takes precedence over the seriousness of the commitment.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Certain elements should remain. These express the objective reality of a commitment in the eyes of society and the law.

When the form of a ceremony is down to personal choice, the notion of 'take it or leave it' is already part of the couple's marriage.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

A location needs to uphold the dignity of the occasion. Certain places cannot be interpreted as contributing to this.

Dignity has to do with the objective seriousness of the commitment. Extremes in personal choice are about the 'Me culture'.

on inland waters such as lakes or rivers,, in the air, and/or, in private homes.

Please share your views below:

It should not be allowed in these locations. An outdoors location can potentially contribute to the dignity of the occasion - the garden of a country house / community centre (not a garden centre though !)

The others will by their nature be about a personal statement. Or taken to the extreme a novelty consumerist idea.

Chapter 4: Preliminaries

Consultation Question 4:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Marriage is meant to be a permanent arrangement. Making it easier for transient member of the public to enter into marriage contracts is step towards devaluing marriage. It also means that someone can come in from abroad, possibly clandestinely, and at short notice, and get married. It would also make it easier for forced arranged marriages to take place.

Consultation Question 5:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Marriage is a public relationship, affecting others in society. Any attempt to remove the public nature of the arrangement will make it easier for forced marriages to take place.

Consultation Question 6:

another period of time.

Please expand on your answer:

I believe that seven days is an absolute minimum, and if the couple involved are serious about marriage more time and preparation should have been given than just one week!

Reducing the minimum period is setting couple up for what is assumed to be a less permanent relationship. The ideal for marriage should be lifelong, therefore a couple (and their families) should be taking a significant amount of time to think it through in advance.

Consultation Question 7:

Please share your views below:

Marriage is above all a personal relationship. To consider interviews being done remotely makes the assumption that personal interaction between the couple and other people is not important. Marriage is a public relationship, therefore the arrangements for it should be in the real world, rather than carried out remotely.

Consultation Question 8:

Please share your views below:

Yes, notice should continue to be given outside England and Wales, if one of the couple is resident in another country. As I said above, this is a public relationship and all notice of it should be in the public domain, including those place where one of the couple is resident outside England and Wales.

Consultation Question 9:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Notices of marriage should be publicly displayed both in hard copy and in public, as well as online.

Consultation Question 10:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

That seems reasonable, given the amount of time some couples take to get the arrangements and finance together to set up home and organise the ceremony.

Consultation Question 11:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

I am not sure about this as I do not know what the current practice is.

Consultation Question 12:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

That seems reasonable.

Please share your views below:

I think that, once arrangements have been made, a substitute officiant should only be used if the original officiant is prevented by death, serious illness or an unavoidable delay -one which might have entailed putting off the ceremony from the day stipulated.

Consultation Question 13:

No

Please expand on your answer:

There is no need to change current practice in this respect.

Consultation Question 14:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

This question is muddling and unclear. It needs further clarification.

Consultation Question 15:

Please share your views below:

I believe that publishing the banns in the church where the wedding is to take place maintains the practice of making the marriage public to the whole community. Marriage is a public relationship, rooted in the community, and even if the couple are now living in other places, it is important that the community where the wedding is to take place know of the event.

Consultation Question 16:

Please share your views below:

Yes, documentary evidence is important. No one celebrating an Anglican wedding should be put in the position of celebrating a wedding where the documentary evidence is lacking, otherwise they might find themselves having celebrated an invalid wedding!

Consultation Question 17:

Please share your views below:

Yes, they should be required to attend such meetings and make a declaration that there is no impediment to their marriage. Openness and honesty are critical to the success of marriage. Allowing either of the couple not to attend would open the door to a lack of clarity and honesty in the proceedings.

Consultation Question 18:

Anglican preliminaries should continue to be recognised as legal preliminaries to weddings officiated by the Church of England and the Church in Wales;
or

Please expand on your answer:

Yes, Anglican preliminaries should continue to be recognised as legal preliminaries. There is no good reason not to change current practice.

Chapter 5: Officiants

Consultation Question 19:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Both parties should have freely and publicly expressed consent to the marriage.

Consultation Question 20:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

This does not seem clear. Does this imply that registration officers could officiate at religious ceremonies? Does it imply that ordained and licensed priests could not ratify religious weddings.

Consultation Question 24:

Consultation Question 25:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Does this mean 20 members in total in the whole country? If so, it seems very unwise, as almost any small quasi religious/secular group could set it self up to perform marriages.

Consultation Question 26:

Please share your views below:

'Public policy or morality' is a very loose term, and difficult to define.

If an organisation's purposes are 'unlawful' as tested by case law and statute then it probably is best to exclude that organisation.

Consultation Question 27:

Please share your views below:

This is quite tricky. What offices, outside those of 'priest' or 'minister' in a recognised church, would be nominated? ( Priests / ministers would normally have gone through a significant amount of training before being registered. Can we be sure that an officiant of another organisation, religious or secular, would have received adequate training?)

Consultation Question 28:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes, such lists must be in the public domain.

Consultation Question 29:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Independent officiants must have undergone suitable training - see above question 26.

Consultation Question 30:

Consultation Question 31:

Consultation Question 32:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

While officiant should go into this a form of public service, there should be adequate remuneration in respect of the officiant's time.

Consultation Question 33:

No

Please expand on your answer:

There should be limits, otherwise it could be turned into a 'for profit' business.

Consultation Question 34:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 35:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

The proposals need to define what is meant by 'dignity' and 'solemnity'.

These terms need to be expanded and made clearer. Above all, the importance and seriousness of the commitment of marriage should not be watered down. Marriage must be seen as a commitment which requires an assent of the will to maintain the relationship not just for a while, but for life.

Consultation Question 36:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

This seems sensible and essential.

Consultation Question 37:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes, this seems sensible.

Consultation Question 38:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

This seems like a sensible safeguard.

Consultation Question 39:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

This seems like a sensible safeguard.

Consultation Question 40:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Not sure what this means. Does it mean that once someone is authorised they are authorised for life? No retirement age? What if someone becomes unable by virtue of age related illness or mental disability?

Consultation Question 41:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

' CPD' for this seems a bit strange. It isn't a skill or profession in the same way as teaching, medicine or law.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

1.a. The parties should be required to express their consent to be married to each other orally. There has to be a public declaration of commitment. (I realise that in exceptional circumstances, a party might be limited by disability from making a public oral declaration, but the standard of making on public declaration orally should not be watered down. 1.b. The parties must both declare publicly, at the ceremony, that there is no impediment to their marrying. 2. If 1.b is maintained then there should be no need for the proposal in 2. An agreed set form of words from religious or non-religious organisations should be the agreed framework - couples do already have the flexibility within the set order to add to it according to their wishes. Merely personalising the ceremony according to the whims or wishes of the couple diminishes the public seriousness of the commitment.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

A wedding is a public declaration in which society and the state have an interest to see that. A particular ceremony should not just be allowed because the couple want it, but because it is appropriate for such a significant event. The idea that a couple should be able to choose everything about a wedding ceremony comes from a view of marriage which implies that a couple can do what they like, and it could lead to the erosion of the serious nature of the commitment.

Consultation Question 44:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Anglican weddings need to comply with legal requirements as the C of E is established by law. This presumably does not apply to Quaker or Jewish ceremonies.

Consultation Question 45:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

This seems sensible and appropriate.

Please share your views below:

Vows to acknowledge that the marriage is made in the sight of God as well as the registrar, that the marriage is made for life would be appropriate if the couple requested.

Consultation Question 46:

No

Please expand on your answer:

I don't see the purpose of this proposal. What material difference does it make?

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Absolutely not. Marriage is a public undertaking, not just a private contract. It affects the families concerned and wider society. Obviously where there has been a family disagreement over the marriage it can be divisive, but that in no way diminishes the need for the marriage to be public.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Venues should not simply be allowed because marrying couples want them, but because they are appropriate places to hold such a significant ceremony.

Part of the requirement for specific places to be registered for weddings is to safeguard the public nature of the relationship. There are some specific benefits in a wider variety of venues being allowed (for example churches who do not own their own building), but such changes must be made only in exceptional circumstances.

Please share your views below:

The implication behind the idea here is that 'any old place' will do. This undermines the significance and importance of marriage.

The venue should be continue to be a registered public place, which is accessible to all. Otherwise we will be facing the idea of ceremonies in balloons, light aircraft, rowing boats etc. It makes a mockery of the importance of the decision and commitment.

Consultation Question 49:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Absolutely not. As stated in previous answers, marriage s an important public commitment. It should take place in venues which are accessible to all.

Consultation Question 50:

Other

Other

Other

Please expand on your answer:

It is clearly a contradiction in terms for a non-religious wedding to take place in religious building.

The religion concerned needs to be able to retain control over the arrangement and wording of any ceremony in its premises.

Consultation Question 51:

No

Please expand on your answer:

As stated earlier , the location of a wedding should only be in an appropriately licensed venue.

Consultation Question 52:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

At the very least. This is a a vague proposal which needs elucidating.

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Safety and dignity are important. But recognised registered locations are already such aren't they?

Consultation Question 53:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

This is sensible, but a registered location is presumable that already?

Please share your views below:

Chapter 8: Registration

Consultation Question 54:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

This seems sensible.

Consultation Question 55:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Sensible plan.

Consultation Question 56:

No

Please expand on your answer:

While paper registration has its drawbacks, electronic registration is in my opinion too vulnerable security wise, and too easy to forge.

Chapter 10: Validity and offences

Consultation Question 57:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes these proposals seem sensible on all counts, as they preserve people's integrity and freedom of conscience.

No

Please expand on your answer:

I agree with points 1 and 3, but believe that as a public ceremony there have to be witnesses.

Consultation Question 58:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

These measures seem reasonable.

Consultation Question 59:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes, these seem sensible measures.

Other

Please expand on your answer:

I am confused by this. While I have heard of the term 'common law marriage' I thought that this was not regarded as a presumption, socially or legally.

Consultation Question 60:

Please expand on your answer:

I do not have a strong opinion either way on this.

Consultation Question 61:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes, this is clearly necessary to protect the integrity of the state and and the institution of marriage.

Chapter 11: Special types of wedding

Consultation Question 62:

Please share your views below:

I have no immediate experience of any of these areas, so don't feel able to comment.

Consultation Question 63:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes, because I believe that this is still marriage and should be treated the same as other marriages.

Consultation Question 64:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

This is an area I do not know about, but it seems a reasonable proposal.

Consultation Question 65:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Assuming that this is the same as for other marriages, yes, it seems reasonable.

Consultation Question 66:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

I think the same applies here as to question 65.

Consultation Question 67:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

I am uneasy about the plans suggested in 2,3 and 4. I can see that there might be circumstance where it would be compassionate to allow preliminaries to take place remotely, but it looks like a first step towards allowing these to happen remotely for all other weddings. This would detract from the personal nature of the whole process.

Other

Please expand on your answer:

'Yes' to provision 1 in Q 67, but an unequivocal 'no' to 2, 3, and 4, for the reasons stated above.

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Again, my opinions about provisions 2, 3 and 4 remain the same. No measures should detract from the seriousness of the commitment to marriage, even if one party is close to death.

There is a degree of protection needed for the wider families of those involved, as rushed marriages of this kind could have an effect on the property provisions of a 'soon to be deceased' party.

Consultation Question 68:

No

Please expand on your answer:

I believe any loosening of the locations where marriages can take place will make it easier for marriages to take place incognito, whereas I have stressed throughout my replies that marriage is a public statement about a new relationship within society.

Consultation Question 69:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

I am unclear about this. I understood that it was already possible for marriages to take place on board ship in international waters.

Consultation Question 70:

Please share your views below:

My feeling about this and question 69 is that the laws of England and Wales should apply to areas within their territories, and not in international waters. I feel that loosening these requirements will open the system to abuse.

Consultation Question 71:

No

Please expand on your answer:

My attitude to this question is contained within the response to Q 70.

Consultation Question 72:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

I understood that this was already the case.

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes

Consultation Question 74:

No

Please expand on your answer:

I still consider that rules which apply to weddings on land should also apply to those conducted in international waters.

Chapter 12: Fees

Consultation Question 75:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 76:

(1) the same fee as other cases in which the registration officer must travel to the person giving notice, set nationally on a cost-recovery basis; or

Please expand on your answer:

I believe that marriage is still 'marriage', even in unusual circumstances and that provisions which attenuate the normal rules are a bad precedent.

Consultation Question 77:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

This seems reasonable.

Consultation Question 78:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

This also seems reasonable.

Consultation Question 79:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 80:

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 81:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 82:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 83:

(1) the fee should be set by regulation at a level below cost-recovery; or

Please expand on your answer:

Marriage remains a serious commitment, and the costs should reflect that, and the extra time required of the registration officer.

Consultation Question 84:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Chapter 13: The potential impact of our proposals

Consultation Question 85:

Please share your views below:

I believe very strongly that marriage is good for society and for family life, that the outcomes for children brought up by married parents are generally better than for those brought up in other households.

However, making it 'easier' for couples to marry does not mean that stability of society and relationships will be automatically enhanced. I believe it is essential that any couple contemplating marriage should have to consider seriously the kind of commitment they are making.

Therefore I think the law should encourage people to think not how easy it is to get married, but but how serious a commitment it is.

Consultation Question 86:

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

I do not have enough (current) experience of the costs of marriage to make an informed comment on these points, except to say that anything which reduces the commitment required of couples to get married is liable to erode the status and the importance of marriage in general.

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it. We would also welcome any data on the size of businesses that are affected by the law or will be impacted under our proposed reforms. :

1. I think hosting weddings should always require government pre-approval.
2. no comment.
3. I think that religious wedding should always take place in religious premises.
4. The assumption behind this idea is that weddings are primarily for business purposes is pretty cheap!

But the circumstances of weddings , their locations, their content, and their significance must be maintained by law and not left to officiants choices. Other proposals in this consultation undermine marriage as a solemn contract intended for lifelong union and these waterings of the dignity and solemnity of marriage must not be abetted. So officiants must be honouring a more demanding code of marriage.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

There are good underlying reasons for the present requirements and the proposals weaken the importance of a solemn lifelong contract. The law has always and for good reason provided for example that contracts in relation to land must take particular forms or be evidenced in writing. Deeds exist because of their importance to both the parties and to the public. What is being suggested is a watering down of what should in the interests of families, of children and of the State be solemn contracts built on sound principles of family solidity in good and bad times.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The State should stick to solemn process with defined requirements designed to underline the importance of the contract of marriage.

Consultation Question 44:

No

Please expand on your answer:

As above. It is for the State to set out not the desiderata of a marriage ceremony but the integral requirements.

Consultation Question 45:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

It should be permitted but there is nothing wrong in principle in the combination of both civil and religious components. Indeed the segregation is logically artificial.

Chapter 13: The potential impact of our proposals

Consultation Question 85:

Please share your views below:

there is no evidence that the present law discourages marriage the proposals would encourage more unsound marriages by undermining their foundations. Marriages should be serious public contracts for life conducted with due solemnity and any of the above proposals which contradicts this precept will damage the institution and the families created as a result

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The parties should be required to express consent at the ceremony. It should not be possible for a person to get married without being present at the wedding ceremony. Signing the marriage schedule is inadequate without being present and giving consent at the ceremony.

The solemnity and seriousness of the wedding ceremony needs to be preserved; there is a need for the retention of the minimum declarations. There is already ample flexibility within the ceremony. The lifetime commitment should be agreed upon freely and overtly at the ceremony and the current prescribed phrases allow this.

The wedding ceremony is an important part of national society and, as such, should retain some standardisation.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

A wedding is a public declaration in which society and the state have an interest; the seriousness and solemnity of a marriage ceremony should be preserved. There is already the possibility for parties to express their individuality, faith or interests by partaking in unofficial ceremonies additional to the legal ceremony. This nation needs to preserve a dignified ceremony for marriage.

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This proposal would change the marriage ceremony from being very much a public declaration. A marriage ceremony should be public otherwise the societal nature of the declaration is diminished or eliminated; this should not be a private matter nor should there be the opportunity for coercion.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The seriousness and solemnity of the marriage ceremony should be reflected in the choices for venue. Venues should not simply be allowed because marrying couples want them, but because they are appropriate settings to hold such a significant ceremony. Wedding ceremonies should take place in publicly accessible venues.

Please share your views below:

The venue needs to be accessible to the public to maintain the societal importance of the ceremony. Private venues mean private ceremonies with the risk of coercion. Ceremonies whilst in flight or at sea are not accessible to the public and become private ceremonies with the risk of coercion and loss of the dignity, seriousness and solemnity of the occasion.

What does 'in the air' mean? Do the participants need to be 'in the air' or does this just mean that this happens somewhere, somehow (e.g. on the internet, on the phone, or shouted across the street)?

Unofficial wedding ceremonies have taken place in an S&M dungeon, underwater, and at a Comic Book convention with a couple dressed as comic book heroes. It would be completely incompatible with the dignity of marriage for venues like these to host legal weddings.

Consultation Question 49:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The venue needs to be accessible to the public to maintain the societal importance of the ceremony. Private venues mean private ceremonies with the risk of coercion. Ceremonies whilst in flight or at sea are not accessible to the public and become private ceremonies with the risk of coercion and loss of the dignity, seriousness and solemnity of the occasion.

Chapter 13: The potential impact of our proposals

Consultation Question 85:

Please share your views below:

The current law encourages couples to take marriage seriously and offers the couple a dignified and solemn ceremony to reflect this and safeguards against coercion.

Many of the changes proposed would allow for unsafe, undignified, private ceremonies and encourage a more frivolous and less sincere attitude to entering legal, lifelong marriage.

The people of England and Wales need the marriage ceremony to be protected in its public, dignified and solemn state to reflect the importance of marriage as part of the backbone of this society.

The people of England and Wales and future immigrants should be protected against coercion into marriage. These proposals threaten to significantly reduce protection to individuals.

Consultation Question 86:

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

The cost of weddings in the UK have become unbelievably high. But the exorbitant costs are not that of the formal ceremony but of the celebrations chosen by parties following the ceremony.

Perhaps there should be 'financial allowances' for parties where it is substantiated that finances are inhibiting a formal wedding ceremony. Parties that want to enter a legal, lifelong marriage, should not be inhibited by not being able to afford the legal ceremony, including at a place of worship. I believe many places of worship would be willing to give such parties a ceremony at no or little cost.

Consultation Question 35:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Absolutely. Marriage is meant to be a lifetime commitment and as such is one of the most important decisions any person will ever make with potentially huge personal/emotional/financial/family/societal consequences. and so the gravity of the commitment needs to be strongly emphasised. Would recommend that the definition of dignity and solemnity needs to be made clearer.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

There is already wide flexibility in the ceremony but this would allow far too much opportunity for inappropriate formats and (inadvertently) might encourage couples to take marriage less seriously. It is vital to ensure the couple is physically present and fully engaged in a commitment that must be appropriately defined by Law and has enormous consequences for themselves their families and society.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

As a Biology Graduate I cannot emphasise enough the overwhelming sociological/biological evidence of the benefits to the mental, physical, emotional, financial and social wellbeing of both parties, their offspring and society afforded by 'lifetime pair-bonding' i.e. marriage. It is therefore critically important that as a society we do all we can to reinforce the empirical data by emphasising the established reality and thereby encouraging participants in marriage to understand its huge benefits when the lifetime marriage commitment is taken seriously and in good faith by both parties. There is an enormous risk that if any type of ceremony is allowed, further trivialisation of marriage will become inevitable.

Consultation Question 44:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Providing due legal process is followed

Consultation Question 45:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

In an appropriate format this should be encouraged if the couple ask for it

Please share your views below:

Appropriate faith-based Hymns, songs, poems and readings from Bible (and other religious texts) etc.

Consultation Question 46:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Freedom of choice should be maintained

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This will increase the risk of forced marriage which remains a serious problem in the UK. Marriage should be seen to be a commitment to be celebrated in the public domain

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Any venue should be of the appropriate size, be dignified and safe and comply with Disability (Access to Premises - Buildings) Standards 2010 and reflect the seriousness of the commitment being made.

Please share your views below:

Marriage is a public commitment.. Any venue should be of the appropriate size, easily accessible to the public, dignified and safe and comply with Disability (Access to Premises - Buildings) Standards 2010 and reflect the seriousness of the commitment being made. Difficult to see how 'in the air' or 'on inland water's would meet these requirements and may exclude some through aquaphobia and aerophobia and be unsafe especially for children/elderly/disabled.

Consultation Question 49:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Marriage is a public commitment. Any venue should be of the appropriate size, easily accessible to the public, dignified and safe and comply with Disability (Access to Premises - Buildings) Standards 2010 and reflect the seriousness of the commitment being made.

No

No

Please expand on your answer:

Marriage is a public commitment. Any venue should be of the appropriate size, easily accessible to the public, dignified and safe and comply with Disability (Access to Premises - Buildings) Standards 2010 and reflect the seriousness of the commitment being made. Providing the building meets these criteria it should be allowed.

Consultation Question 51:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Marriage is a public commitment. Any venue should be of the appropriate size, easily accessible to the public, dignified and safe and comply with Disability (Access to Premises - Buildings) Standards 2010 and reflect the seriousness of the commitment being made. The definition of 'appropriate size, easily accessible to the public, dignified and safe and comply with Disability (Access to Premises - Buildings) Standards 2010' should be defined by Law and the officiant held responsible to ensure the legal requirements are fulfilled.

Consultation Question 52:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Safe and dignified should be clearly defined by Law and the officiant held responsible to ensure the legal requirements are fulfilled.

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Safe and dignified should be clearly defined by Law and the GRO guidance should include safeguards to ensure the location meets these criteria and are suitable to reflect the significance of marriage.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

There should be public declaration considered to be foundational to legal marriage. If not, couples would be able to say anything they like or perhaps nothing at all.

I do not believe couple should be able to completely personalise their wedding ceremony. A wedding is not just about the couple. It is a union which is understood by society and should be legally defined.

There should be some publicly agreed proscribed words which should be kept to a minimum and then couples can add to them as they wish.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Marriage is not just a little event between two people who agree to say whatever they like. It is a publicly recognised institution that the community, society and state have an interest. It needs to reflect the seriousness of the commitments being made

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Conducting a marriage behind closed doors gives a wrong perception that marriage a private rather than public affair.

The open doors requirement was introduced hundreds of years ago as a protection against forced marriage. This is still a problem in our society.

A publicly recognised institution needs to be open to the public.

Chapter 4: Preliminaries

Consultation Question 4:

No

Please expand on your answer:

People should be required to marry within a registration district where they are living for at least 7 days before the ceremony. This means they are known locally and any impediments or difficulties can be declared. To ignore this weakens marriage and could allow an enforced or bigamous marriage to take place.

Consultation Question 5:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Face to face personal interview is essential to decide whether this is genuine marriage or not. A bogus marriage for citizenship could be done on line and allowed if not properly interviewed and checked.

Consultation Question 6:

seven days; or

Please expand on your answer:

seven days seems sensible.

Consultation Question 7:

Please share your views below:

No remote interviews. They must be done in person by the couple concerned to assess whether it is a sham or bogus marriage and also whether consent is given knowingly and freely.

One remembers the BBC documentary about a man in Glasgow taking a woman friend to the Registry office after getting all her family details and SHE WAS UNAWARE this was a ploy to marry her. The police got involved as they knew about him.

Consultation Question 16:

Please share your views below:

Very definitely yes. There are cases where people marry in Church so as to get a nice photo and nice service BUT DO NOT TAKE THEIR VOWS SERIOUSLY ENOUGH.

Consultation Question 17:

Please share your views below:

Yes. For the sake of both of them. No illegal marriages.

Consultation Question 18:

Anglican preliminaries should continue to be recognised as legal preliminaries to weddings officiated by the Church of England and the Church in Wales;
or

Please expand on your answer:

Yes. Catholics will want a proper Catholic wedding. For non Anglican Weddings or other denominational weddings, a marriage in the Registry Office should be followed by a Christian ceremony in their own Church if requested

Chapter 5: Officiants

Consultation Question 19:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Very strongly. To exclude any of the three reduces marriage to a party game with no serious commitment to life long love and keeping the vows.

Consultation Question 20:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

For civil weddings, yes. For Church Weddings a specific person may be legally nominated to officiate; or the building is legalised for the Marriage and the Registration Officer attends as a witness to ensure all legal requirements are met.

Consultation Question 35:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes and ensure the couple do understand this is meant to be a life long commitment and not used as a step to quickie divorce unless there is harm or danger from their partner.

Consultation Question 36:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Providing it does not conflict with genuine religious belief of the couple. Will there be strict guidance on the exact age of the couple to prevent child marriages; and forced marriages where the woman is compelled to marry a man she does not want.

Consultation Question 37:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Where the Organisation is scrupulously honest and has the legal power and legal teeth to investigate and act.

Consultation Question 38:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Generally yes. However, people who respect traditional marriage and cannot in belief or conscience marry a same sex couple MUST NOT BE PENALISED OR DISMISSED FROM SERVICE. That would be religious discrimination contrary to the Human Rights Act and other legislation. .

Consultation Question 39:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes but monitor their performance to ensure they keep up to standard.

Consultation Question 40:

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

1. there should be a very clear oral answer from both parties during the ceremony, otherwise the idea of consent is meaningless. They should be required to declare again that there is no impediment to their marriage. [REDACTED]

All weddings civil and other must use a form of words during the ceremony to confirm consent and availability to marry. Otherwise the ceremony is meaningless and is trivialised.

This is a very important event in the life of two people and must not be watered down or trivialised. Future children will need a couple committed to each other and to them as they knew what they wanted.

Consultation Question 46:

No

Please expand on your answer:

As said before some people may need to have a civil ceremony followed by some sort of religious service. Let free choice be permitted.

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Do not repeal. Marriage is a public ceremony of public commitment to each other before witnesses. Public access of non troublesome people should be allowed.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This is a public and serious ceremony and should not or sea diving weddings be trivialised or people will want bungee jump weddings or paragliding weddings to give extra excitement and spectacular photos.

on inland waters such as lakes or rivers,, in the air, and/or

Please share your views below:

no inland water weddings or in the air weddings as it loses the sense of commitment to each other and glamorises another activity. It turns a wedding into a film set for Hollywood Glamour. Question of health and safety issues also.

In view of the seriousness of marriage, and the ceremony, it is important that the type of organisation should reflect that. Marriage would be trivialised by allowing sports' clubs, restaurants, or any ad hoc organisations to officiate at weddings.
The organisation should be non-commercial.

Consultation Question 35:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Yes, but what exactly does that mean? The form of words used and the venue both come under that umbrella. Would a wedding be allowed in a supermarket or a nightclub? Much more thought needs to go into 'dignity and solemnity' both of which are very important.

Consultation Question 36:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

This also needs to include rules about the venue.

Consultation Question 37:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

That is OK to start with, but if the organisation has only 20 members (see your question 25 above) all sorts of problems could ensue. There needs to be central oversight as well.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

1 (a) Why not orally? Only if one of the persons to be married has an impediment.

This is a public and legal ceremony, and couples must make it absolutely clear to those gathered that they are entering into a serious relationship. This is meant to be for life. Couples should not be able to tailor the ceremony to whatever they want

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

If your proposal was agreed, what would marriage become? There needs to be a core form of words and expectations common to all ceremonies which states the importance of marriage not just to the couples, but in law and in wider society, too.

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Marriage is not just a private act between two people, but a public declaration to friends and wider society that the union into which they are entering is a lifelong, serious business.

Would not 'private' weddings allow for forced marriages?

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Come on, this is open to all sorts of abuse! A toilet? Burger King? Venues need to be legally authorised. Outdoor venues should be allowed providing they are open to the public and sensible - not a mountain top or a rowing boat, for example.

There may well be some advantages in widening the number and type of place where weddings are allowed, but only if the seriousness of marriage is upheld.

Please share your views below:

See my comments above.

'In the air' hardly seems public, nor do private homes.

Consultation Question 49:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Marriage takes place within the context of wider society. It should be accessible to the public. It is an act among family and/or friends where the couple make promises to each other and the family/friends are witnesses.

Consultation Question 50:

No

No

No

Please expand on your answer:

Let there be no barrier to weddings if we think that marriage is important.

A Muslim and Hindu may not be able to be married in their mosque or temple but may want some religious element to the ceremony.

Consultation Question 51:

No

Please expand on your answer:

A centrally held list of venues should be kept.

Consultation Question 52:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

I agree with safe and dignified, but venues need to be appropriate, too.

A toilet? Burger King? Venues need to be legally authorised. Outdoor venues should be allowed providing they are open to the public and sensible - not a mountain top or a rowing boat, for example.

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Guidance is probably not enough, and would be open to interpretation.

A centrally held list of venues would overcome this problem.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

I believe that simply signing the marriage certificate does not express a persons serious wish to be married if they are not there in person. This undermines the importance of marriage being face to face.

Due to there being already flexibility regarding marriage vows, as people can say what they wish when exchanging them, I feels that without the expression of marriage being orally made, this risks undermining the solemnity of marriage.

There is also a risk that these types of marriages are parodied. Marriage is not just about the two that come together, but the vows that they make that will influence their families and the possible children that will be birthed within that marriage. Thus, it must be entered soberly.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

I would like to highlight again that this trivializes marriage and its long term effect. I disagree that any form of marriage should be acceptable, as it would give people free rein wed in an inappropriate and frivolous manner, as has been seen already by some who get married in the ear or even under the sea.

This takes away the intent of marriage, to be entered into soberly and reverently, it being a life-long commitment.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The venue of the marriage depicts the importance the couples place on the marriage itself. I would like to again reinforce my opinion that if couples wishing to marry can get married anywhere, this allows them to get married ANYWHERE. Should they really take their life-long vows on the bus, or worse still in Starbucks?

Please share your views below:

I think that marriage should be taken place in venues that highlight the sacredness of it.

Consultation Question 20:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Many places of worship do not have an authorised person in place. Under these proposals they would have to appoint and train one that may only be needed very occasionally. There is the danger that some churches will fall foul of unfamiliar marriage regulations and procedures in order to conduct marriages.

This sounds reasonable, but there are implicit dangers.

It could be seen as a means of penalising beliefs and moral views that are contrary to the prevailing cultural opinion. "contrary to public policy or morality" is too subjective an assessment.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Without prescribed words, a marriage and its ceremony could become meaningless (since words express meaning). There could be no commitment made through solemn promises. The ceremony could be taken casually by all concerned. Allowing wholly personalised marriages would send the message that it is wholly personalised and private.

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Marriage(s) should continue to be open ceremonies contrary to wholly private affairs. Where else would there be provision for the question if anyone knows of any reason why these two should not be joined together?

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

There would be advantages to this provision for, say, churches that do not own their own buildings but use schools or community buildings. However, there needs to be more precise definition of what constitutes "dignified" and "safe" so as to exclude extremes that have been used for "unofficial" ceremonies. The proposals in following questions do not address this sufficiently and place too onerous a personal load on officiants.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Marriage should be a public commitment, and a set formula, such as that in the Anglican and Catholic churches, is the time honoured way of expressing a lifelong commitment.

It must be heard in public, in order to give legal validity to the marriage, that each person declares there is no impediment and that their consent is freely given.

It must not be possible to be married without being present at the wedding ceremony.

It is because the family is the basic unit of a responsible society that public commitment is needed for stability for the upbringing of children.

Our present society has forgotten its duty and responsibility to its children and to society as a whole by behaving like animals in the area of sexual mores.

Without due thought and attention to lifelong commitment to the upbringing, mental and physical health, of the children, and the financial concerns of their own family and of society as a whole , then civilisation falls apart as history has shown us in the rise and fall of previous civilisations.

Marriage must not become a private personal matter, like a hobby to be changed at will.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Marriage needs to be a formal legal statement for the good of the state and society as a whole. It needs to have a set formula of declarations for legal validity.

Anything else reduces the seriousness, dignity and solemnity of a lifelong commitment.

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Forced marriages are still a problem, it is most important to take every possible step to avoid them.

Public access and open doors should help to protect the vulnerable who might be coerced into a ceremony.

Marriage has public significance, it is not just a private arrangement and should not be seen as such.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

A marriage ceremony should be serious and dignified, stringent safe-guards need to be proposed or any sort of unsuitable venue could be suggested. People do not have to get married, they can opt for any sort of a relationship, but if they wish to marry it must be seen to be a legal, serious commitment.

Please share your views below:

I just want to reiterate that people can do what they want where they want within current legal limits but when it is a question of getting married this should be seen as a solemn and dignified occasion with legal validity and acknowledgement of and acceptance of financial and legal responsibility for any ensuing children. It should therefore be conducted in an appropriate place and the law should uphold this for the good of society as a whole.

Consultation Question 49:

No

Please expand on your answer:

For the good of society as a whole and specifically for the avoidance of forced marriages it is important that the open-door rule is retained.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

I do not agree that someone who is not present at a marriage ceremony could be legally allowed to get married. Aside from the whole reduction of the solemnity of a marriage ceremony, there are issues of identity fraud and coercion that would be much easier to commit if the candidate is not required to be at the ceremony in person.

It appears from this that couples could decide not to make any public declaration at all. This appears to be downgrading marriage to something of a very different nature. Unlike the solemnity and legality of marriage, done publicly and as a societal institution, it appears to becoming trivial, individualistic, and with fewer legal parameters and safeguards. This is a travesty of what a marriage ceremony should be.

If this is what people want, why not leave marriage as it is, but create a new option that is has a different label?

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

As I have stated above, this will divorce marriage from society and state, becoming an individualistic and potentially trivialising event. It takes away the attention from the serious legal and public nature of the marriage vows, and highlights individual wishes and potentially imaginative excesses.

This needs further clarification. Will there be a legal protocol about what a 'safe and dignified' venue is? A system whereby an individual official's opinion on this matter is acceptable, could mean that over time the permitted venues become broader and the notion of a solemn, serious, public and dignified marriage ceremony is undermined.

Other

Please expand on your answer:

As long as this is in keeping with a solemn, serious, public and dignified ceremony.

Our daughter was not able to get married in May as scheduled due to pandemic restrictions [REDACTED]. She got married in July in a church according to the pandemic restrictions [REDACTED]. It seems to me the complete ban on weddings and then the severe restrictions were so extremely out of proportion to the risk. No singing, try to just have one person (the minister) speak, no food and drink, such a small max number of people present, etc. Some other events and activities allowed to go on in the country with fewer restrictions seemed higher risk. We understood and could appreciate that 250-300 people should not gather and mingle unimpeded with food and drink and air molecules flowing every which way. As I've followed the guidance, comments by gov't leaders, etc. throughout the year I was struck by the "low view" of such a significant, sacred life event and building block of a stable society.

This is well and good to state, but my concern is the definition of terms. If possible, "dignity and solemnity" should be elaborated on at least a bit. ## Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Certainly couples should be present at the ceremony. The current requirements offer plenty of options and flexibility regarding personalising the ceremony in both forms and wording. The proposal as stated even would mean that couples would not have to say anything to have a legal marriage. This proposal threatens what was stated earlier regarding dignity and solemnity. Marriage is not just about two people but about society and culture and meaning from generation to generation.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

As in Q 4 above, marriage is not simply about two people who want to do whatever they wish and be together for whatever reason and therefore participate in a ceremony completely of their own choosing. A wedding is a public declaration and, as the gov't itself seems to recognise to at least some extent, such a significant should be dignified and solemn.

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

As I noted earlier, a wedding to begin married life is in various ways a public event, public declaration. Such a proposal would deny that. In addition, the existing requirement helps protect against forced marriages.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Not every venue is recognised by most of society as appropriate for a significant and solemn event such as the marriage ceremony. Not every venue would be as safe as the next. Again, the couples' choice or the families' choice should be a factor, but there must be safeguards which seek to preserve what most people of most societies throughout most of history overwhelmingly have understood the nature of this ceremony--even ceremonies generally--to be.

outdoors,, on inland waters such as lakes or rivers,, in the air, and/or, in private homes.

Again, in each of these contexts, the values of dignity, solemnity, and public expression must be taken into account with seriousness.

Consultation Question 52:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

I wish to say again here that vocabulary is so important. Somehow there needs to be more careful consideration and then explanation regarding what "safe" and what "dignified" mean. How can appropriate definitions be maintained in today's environment where so often it seems a word can be taken well beyond its historical/traditionally understood semantic range.

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

I hesitatingly say "Yes." As I noted above, it will be critical to somehow offer the wider public and wedding ceremony officiants ways in which terms like safe and dignified cannot be construed to mean almost anything they wish them to.

Our marriage was legally binding.

Chapter 4: Preliminaries

Consultation Question 4:

No

Please expand on your answer:

If someone is serious about getting married, why would they want to go to a district where they are not resident?

Consultation Question 5:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

It is very important that if possible to give notice on line or by post, are who they say they are. Fake marriages so that people may stay in our country have been too prevalent in the past.

Consultation Question 6:

another period of time.

Please expand on your answer:

At least 4 weeks (or more) so that any in-depth appropriate checks can be made.

Consultation Question 7:

Please share your views below:

An in-person interview should ALWAYS be a requirement. Sham or forced marriages are, sadly, far too common and protection measures should be tight to avoid these.

Consultation Question 8:

Please share your views below:

In exceptional circumstances and providing rigorous checks are made, yes it should be possible.

Consultation Question 9:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Notices of marriage should also be displayed in other places, eg the Press, as not all people have access to a computer which never seems to be taken into consideration. There are still a great many people who do not interact with social media, computers etc contrary to popular belief.

Consultation Question 10:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

An appropriate period of time for the schedule to be valid should be explored taking into account all possible issues.

Consultation Question 11:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Any officiant should be a licensed person to undertake a wedding - it should never be allowed that anyone not licensed should be able to undertake a wedding.

Consultation Question 12:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Only if it can be proven that the original officiant has valid reason not to be present and only if the substitute is also proven to be an appropriate licensed person.

Please share your views below:

We cannot think of any other reasons, apart from those listed, where a substitute officiant should be needed.

Consultation Question 13:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Why should this be? If couples meet and one is from Scotland, Northern Ireland or Ireland and want to get married, why should it be that they can no longer authorise a wedding in England or Wales. Surely the banns can be published in both places - England, Wales or Scotland, Northern Ireland or Ireland.

Consultation Question 14:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Why - heaven help us if there is another war, but why repeal them - why does it matter if this rule remains?

Consultation Question 15:

Please share your views below:

It is lovely that at present banns are read out/published in churches where a wedding is to take place, but there is no reason why they should not be published in for example the press/local paper where the church in which a couple are to marry is.

Consultation Question 16:

Please share your views below:

At present Clergy usually know the people they are to marry but to avoid any breaking of the law at all, it would not hurt for documentary evidence to have to be produced. The same goes for meeting each of the couple separately - whereas said, Clergy usually know people well who they are to marry, it doesn't hurt for them to meet each of the couple separately before banns are published.

Consultation Question 17:

Please share your views below:

Good idea.

Consultation Question 18:

Anglican preliminaries should continue to be recognised as legal preliminaries to weddings officiated by the Church of England and the Church in Wales; or

Please expand on your answer:

Cannot see any reason why all weddings should be preceded by civil preliminaries. Some already take place from choice - they are not banned, it is already a choice people can make. Many couples can have a civil ceremony and follow it up by another in church or just a blessing. Blessings seem to follow almost exactly the entire church wedding ceremony.

Chapter 5: Officiants

Consultation Question 19:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

All should happen to ensure legality and that no-one is being pressurised into a marriage they do not really want.

Consultation Question 20:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

There should always be a requirement that anyone officiating at weddings is in possession of a license and is registered. It is an outrageous proposal that anyone 'off the street' might be able to officiate at a wedding. A marriage is a commitment that should be taken seriously, not become a 'Pantomime Farce'.

Consultation Question 21:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

What is the need (or point) in having 2 (or more)? If the one is a licensed officer why should any more be needed?

Consultation Question 22:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

If taking the 'Clerk in Holy Orders' is to mean as in Christian churches, a minister who is authorised by a church or religious organisation to perform such functions, yes.

Consultation Question 23:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

There most definitely needs to be some sort of official checks made on who can officiate at weddings, religious or Civil.

These proposals need further definition and clarity.

Consultation Question 24:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Once again, as long as it is clear that the marriage 'ceremony' is not being taken lightly.

Please share your views below:

Most certainly and it would be useful for the public to have a proposed list of these organisations so that they can give a view.

Consultation Question 25:

No

Please expand on your answer:

What checks are to be made on groups of 20 members who regularly meet for (worship) or a furtherance of their beliefs - which could be anything, and which could undermine the whole concept of marriage? Surely some sort of check should be made on what beliefs these people have?

Consultation Question 26:

Please share your views below:

Surely organisations which promote purposes that are unlawful or contrary to public policy or morality should not be allowed to be officiants. Who on earth would consider that this might be allowed, think this is ok?

Consultation Question 27:

Please share your views below:

This needs to be explained in more detail - eg, by what office? Can see lots of problems arising from this if we are reading this correctly.

Consultation Question 28:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

There should always be a require for any officiant to be registered and their name kept on a register, which should also state their qualifications to be such an officiant.

Consultation Question 29:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Anyone who wants to be authorised should have to apply for such an authorisation in order to be included on a public list.

Consultation Question 30:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Absolutely - of paramount importance - why wouldn't it be?

Consultation Question 31:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Absolutely - there must be rules and regulations in place to protect against unfit people being allowed to become an officiant.

Consultation Question 32:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Of course. Should not be seen as a profit making business. Any officiant needs to take their role and responsibility seriously.

Consultation Question 33:

No

Please expand on your answer:

A limit on fees needs to be in place to stop mis-use of the office, if it is not to become a profit-making 'business'.

Consultation Question 34:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Both need to remain separate.

Consultation Question 35:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Of paramount importance and steps should be taken to make sure they are 'the right people' to undertake this office.

Consultation Question 36:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

This needs to be set out in 'black and white' exactly what is expected. The role of Officiant is not one that should be taken lightly and all appropriate checks, rules and regulations should be put in place and followed to the letter.

Consultation Question 37:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Control of this should be in the hands of a responsible Government Department (Home Secretary) or trusted Organisation to make sure the importance of marriage is upheld and never taken lightly.

Consultation Question 38:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Obviously someone needs to have authority to take away the power/de-authorise nominated officiants if they are not upholding standards, their duties or responsibilities.

Consultation Question 39:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes as answer to 38.

Consultation Question 40:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Not necessarily - there should surely be checks made that officiants are still able to carry out their duties properly - just like an appraisal at appropriate intervals that all employees have to have.

Consultation Question 41:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Should be an obligation and rule of office.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Declaration (or marriage document) should be signed during the ceremony in the presence of reliable witnesses and proof should be available that all required preliminaries have been undertaken. There has to be definite proof that the wedding is not a sham or forced wedding.

There should be no reduction at all in the seriousness of commitment to marriage, the importance of which must be upheld.

Consultation Question 43:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

There should definitely be an approved form for any Wedding Ceremony containing appropriate wording defined and approved by law - not just left to an individual officiant. Marriage has for far too long been dismissed and downgraded and this has been to the detriment of our society. The sanctity of marriage should be upheld for the important commitment it is and not to be taken lightly.

Consultation Question 44:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

These religious groups should be allowed to impose their own requirements as a matter of their own practice.

Consultation Question 45:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

It is sad that no religious content is allowed at present in Civil Ceremonies and should be allowed. There are various reasons why some couples have a Civil Ceremony, and many of them have religious beliefs that at present are not allowed to be recognised. Religious content should definitely be ALLOWED.

Please share your views below:

There are many couple who for various reasons have to have a Civil Ceremony but they may be of a religious faith. It does no harm for Civil Ceremonies to allow the Lords Prayer to be said or for a poem with a religious content to be read or even a hymn to be sung if they wish.

Consultation Question 46:

No

Please expand on your answer:

What is this going to achieve? Why shouldn't couples be able to have a religious ceremony following a civil ceremony. Most definitely should be ALLOWED.

Consultation Question 47:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

It should be allowed for the doors to be closed, not left wide open. People getting married often say - everyone welcome at the Church and often neighbours and friends who have not actually been invited attend. It works well at present as far as we have seen so why change it?

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

We feel quite strongly that if weddings are allowed ANYWHERE it will take away the solemnity and seriousness of the occasion - anywhere could presumably mean at worst a public toilet! Definitely not, there has to be some proposal to cover exactly where weddings may take place.

on inland waters such as lakes or rivers,, in the air, and/or

Please share your views below:

We do not agree that weddings should take place on inland waters etc, or in the air.

Regarding outdoors, these sometimes happen now and providing they take place at appropriate outdoor venues (which have a licence) we cannot see the problem. The solemnity of the occasion is usually upheld at these ceremonies.

Likewise, in private homes - these could be allowed if, for example, one of the people has a terminal illness and couldn't be moved or a similar appropriate reason. However, they shouldn't be allowed per se.

Consultation Question 49:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Surely any wedding ceremony should be held where the solemnity of the occasion and privacy of the families can be preserved. If they take place where any member of the public can attend and perhaps make a nuisance of themselves, surely this is not a good idea. There has to be some regulation/rule governing locations.

It would most certainly not be appropriate for a wedding to take place at, for example, Glastonbury during the Festival - this would, like many other venues make a mockery of the whole procedure in our opinion.

Consultation Question 50:

Yes

Other

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Churches should always be for religious Wedding Ceremonies.

Vicars should be allowed to take a religious service at an appropriate venue elsewhere, depending on the circumstances.

Non- religious weddings should NOT be allowed to take place in Church - why would anyone want a non-religious service in Church? Ridiculous idea.

Consultation Question 51:

No

Please expand on your answer:

There should be definite rules and regulations about venues allowed for weddings, religious or otherwise. If there is such a list then the Officiant can decide if it is 'on the list' and an approved location.

Consultation Question 52:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Always but the definition of 'Safe' and 'Dignified' needs to be clearly defined.

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Absolutely - needs an assessment list of rules and regulations.

Consultation Question 53:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Rather than optional, should be mandatory.

Please share your views below:

As said, there should be approved guidance list for assessment of venues.

Chapter 8: Registration

Consultation Question 54:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes absolutely.

Consultation Question 55:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

As English is the main language of our country, should always be in English but could be in Welsh as well - so yes to English and Welsh.

Consultation Question 56:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Yes, if it it will not lead to an abuse of the system.

Chapter 10: Validity and offences

Consultation Question 57:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Sounds a safe practice to be approved.

No

Please expand on your answer:

There should always be witnesses and important that rigorous checks are in place that any documentation is correct before a ceremony is carried out.

Consultation Question 58:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

All correct procedures should be checked and in place before any wedding ceremony takes place.

Consultation Question 59:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Surely a couple should live together after a ceremony - why wouldn't they want to?

Other

Please expand on your answer:

If a couple are committed, why wouldn't they want to go through a legal process. Why should it be presumed they are married. This is a difficult one. As it is, marriage is not given the importance it should have whether a Civil or Religious Ceremony but it has been proven that children brought up in a secure, stable and lovely family tend to thrive better. It is very sad that marriage seems to have been 'downgraded'.

Consultation Question 60:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

What is it proposed to put in its place? If all the previous safeguards have taken place, how could a 'lack of consent' be proved?

Consultation Question 61:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Absolutely, strong safeguards must be put in place to stop this from happening and the penalty if it does should be high.

Chapter 11: Special types of wedding

Consultation Question 62:

Please share your views below:

There should be measures in place for Weddings for terminally ill people, in hospital or housebound to take place.

If someone is in prison, presumably it is for an offence so there should not be any concessions for them. Cannot think of any reason why there should be.

Consultation Question 63:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

To avoid any person who is ill being encouraged to do something they are not happy with or being 'taken for a ride' as it were. The family of anyone with a terminal illness should be involved to make sure everything is above board.

Sadly often where money might be involved, there have been cases reported in the Press of marriages taking place of terminally ill people which shouldn't have been allowed.

Checks should always take place.

Consultation Question 64:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Not too sure about this one. Definitely needs some proper control.

Consultation Question 65:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Should depend on individual circumstances.

Consultation Question 66:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Should depend on individual circumstances.

Consultation Question 67:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Each circumstance needs to be taken into consideration and procedures put in place to stop illegal practices. This is surely essential.

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Nature and length of any emergency always needs to be taken into consideration.

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Every circumstances needs to be investigated, explored and fully taken into consideration.

Consultation Question 68:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Cannot see the relevance of wanting to get married in coastal waters unless there were exceptional circumstances.

Consultation Question 69:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Providing the Captain of the ship has the appropriate authority to do so.

Consultation Question 70:

Please share your views below:

No, not unless there are very exceptional circumstances.

Consultation Question 71:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Think the name of both the vessel and officiant should be given in order that any appropriate check can be carried out.

Consultation Question 72:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Should always be the Captain or other properly registered official.

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Why should the rules be different?

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Why should they not be held by an official officiant?

Consultation Question 73:

Please share your views below:

We are sure that there must be a demand for both.

Consultation Question 74:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

If they are on an extended cruise for example, they obviously will have to wait until they return.

Chapter 12: Fees

Consultation Question 75:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Sounds sensible as long as cost is reasonable.

Consultation Question 76:

(2) a separate fee from other forms of giving notice, set nationally on compassionate grounds at below cost level.

Please expand on your answer:

It would seem sensible to have compassionate grounds for a lower cost.

Consultation Question 77:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Cannot see any reason why they shouldn't be able to.

Consultation Question 78:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Should be a generally agree fee not left to individual Council's to decide.

Consultation Question 79:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Fees should be generally agreed across the board, not left to individuals to decide their own - which could lead to inflated fees in some areas by some Local Authorities.

Consultation Question 80:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes should be agreed standardised fee.

Consultation Question 81:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

There should be standard sensible fees across the board.

Consultation Question 82:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Would make sense.

Consultation Question 83:

(1) the fee should be set by regulation at a level below cost-recovery; or

Please expand on your answer:

Should be able to cover some of the costs.

Consultation Question 84:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

As long as not more then incurred costs.

Chapter 13: The potential impact of our proposals

Consultation Question 85:

Please share your views below:

We have always believed in the sanctity of marriage and think for too long now marriage has been deemed by the 'politically correct brigade' as being irrelevant thus downgrading the meaning and importance of those who decide to get married. It has been made far too easy over some years now, for people to go aimlessly from one relationship to another, which often finds children being shunted from one parent to another and not having a stable family life or upbringing to the detriment of the population as a whole.

People should not go into marriage lightly but because of the relaxation in divorce laws etc, it has become far too easy for people to just walk away. Sadly we have seen far too often children from broken homes suffering. Celebrities have a lot to answer for - many of them seem to think it is ok to 'marry' multiple times and just walk away when they choose. In lots of ways it is sad times we live in where the sanctity of marriage does not have the meaning it once had.

Consultation Question 86:

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

It is not necessary to spend a fortune on a Wedding. You can get married at a reasonable cost whilst still having a lovely day and service at a licensed venue of one's choice. It is the commitment to getting married that is important - not the 'keeping up with the Jones's' attitude of so many today.

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

Weddings should always have to take place in a legally approved, licensed place. This does not mean costs have to be exorbitant. You can have a very cost effective wedding without spending a fortune.

Consultation Question 87:

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it. We would also welcome any data on the size of businesses that are affected by the law or will be impacted under our proposed reforms. :

Couples deciding to get married should investigate all the options available and the costs involved, thus avoiding any additional costs that can be avoided. The availability of registration officers and the costs is surely something that every couple investigate and plan for.

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it. We would also welcome any data on the size of businesses that are affected by the law or will be impacted under our proposed reforms. :

We think the responses to previous questions covers all of these things. We cannot see any benefits of being able to get married anywhere you like without the venue being licensed. If more registration officers are required - there must surely be lots of people looking for new jobs right now - many with the right qualifications or ability to be trained.

Consultation Question 88:

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

We cannot see what impact the current law has on local authorities. Our Local Authority has Civil Ceremonies/Weddings taking place at the Town Hall with the costs known to those who decide to get married there.

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

Cannot really see any benefits, rather a negative if ceremonies are allowed to take place anywhere at all rather than at licensed places like our Local Authority has, as this could result in a lower number of couples deciding to get married at their licensed Town Hall.

Consultation Question 89:

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

Have no evidence of the impact of residents having to travel to get married under the current law other than cost if they choose to travel.

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

Cannot see any potential benefits or otherwise, and do not have any evidence.

Consultation Question 90:

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

No views or evidence.

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

None known.

Consultation Question 91:

Please share your views below:

No doubt Government and/or more likely Local Authorities will come up with some views about potential costs of proposals to change the law as they always do.

Businesses who are at present not allowed to conduct wedding ceremonies but who might be able to under new legislation could benefit but not necessarily to the benefit of the paying public.

Cannot see how religious or non-religious belief organisations are going to be affected unless the law is changed against for example, religious leaders wishes. Religious Leaders should always be able to say what services they can conduct or not in their own churches/places of worship.

Couples always have choices to make when planning a wedding whether it be for the venue, cost or who to invite etc. It can be as cheap or expensive as they wish to make it.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

I believe that merely signing the marriage schedule is not sufficient. The couple who are getting married need to be at the ceremony.

A wedding is a union which is recognised by society legally and so specific phrases should be used to show people are free to consent to the commitment for life that they are about to enter. I do not think couples should be able to say just anything they like or nothing at all at the marriage ceremony.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

I think a wedding is a public ceremony in front of often friends and family. Both the state and society in which we live have an interest in the ceremony of marriage. It needs to be a serious and solemn ceremony to reflect the serious of the lifetime commitment to each other that the couple are starting. The particular ceremony shouldn't necessarily be allowed just because the participants want it, it should be because its appropriate for this very important event. The ceremony should be serious to reflect the couple's undertaking - and shouldn't have frivolous themes. Frivolous themes for marriage ceremonies reflects badly on the seriousness of marriage and gives bad role models for other people. Let's keep the marriage ceremony serious and solemn. There is already a large amount of flexibility in the wedding ceremony. The prescribed words are minimal and a couple can add to them in many different ways to suit them.

I think the law and society have an interest in the marriage ceremony and so entering a union understood by society and legally defined in specific phrases is very important.

Consultation Question 46:

No

Please expand on your answer:

I see no particular reason to change this provision and so it should remain unaltered.

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This requirement was introduced as a protection against forced marriages. Unfortunately forced marriages are still a problem in our society. Forced marriage is a terrible crime - by keeping the 'open doors' requirement it helps to convey the public nature of wedding declarations. 'Open doors' means public access. This is important. As a democratic society, we should not encourage a false idea that marriage is purely a private matter without any public significance.

Wedding declarations should remain a public declaration.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

I do not agree. The marriage ceremony for a couple is a serious and solemn undertaking. The places the ceremony takes place should be appropriate. They shouldn't simply be allowed because the couple getting married want them.

Inappropriate settings should not be legitimised. I do not think that undignified ceremonies or settings should be used for legal weddings.

Please share your views below:

There is a lack of clarity on how the different venues listed above (or any other venues) are tested for 'dignity', solemnity and safety. The terms should be defined and stringent safeguards should be proposed. It is not sufficient to call just for guidance from the General Register Office.

Obviously there are specific benefits in a wider variety of venues being allowed. for instance if someone was very ill, wishing to marry before death and not able to leave their hospital bed, however stringent safeguards need to be met, to keep the solemnity and legality of the marriage and the safety of individuals. We do not want to encourage forced marriages.

Consultation Question 49:

No

Please expand on your answer:

I think that as marriage is a public ceremony, legally binding and society has an interest in it, I think that it is important that civil wedding locations should remain publicly accessible or regularly available to the public for the solemnization of civil marriages.

I think this proposal is rather vague and open to interpretation. The officiant needs to have General Register Office to be accountable to, so that officiants don't start approving frivolous locations for the marriage ceremony.

In the Catholic Church, Marriage is a Sacrament. A priest needs the opportunity to get to know the couple prior to wedding, to help them realise the commitment they are making and their obligations. Also to assist them if necessary, to untangle any previous marriage that may exist. There must be a reasonable period of time to enable these processes to be completed to the reasonable satisfaction of all parties. Even seven days is insufficient!

Chapter 5: Officiants

Consultation Question 19:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 20:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Some churches rely on using a registration officer who is not a member of their congregation. The couple wishing to marry wish to do so in their own church. To remove this option would take away that strongly held wish.

Consultation Question 23:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Officiants should go through the training process which happens at present if they wish to officiate. This would prevent frivolous wedding practices and maintain the serious understanding of the lifelong commitment being made.

Consultation Question 24:

No

Please expand on your answer:

It would be unhelpful to blur the understanding of what a religion is in order to justify a change to marriage ceremonies. Organisations can get their members to undertake the relevant training to qualify as registration officers.

Please share your views below:

Consultation Question 25:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The present arrangements are very satisfactory to ensure that marriage is seen as a serious matter.

Consultation Question 26:

Please share your views below:

"purposes that are ... contrary to public ... morality" is far too vague a definition. Unlawful organisations should clearly be refused; but to create a supposed moral judgement would be to open decisions to the whims and changes of social morality which the last ten years has shown us can be very rapid and controversial.

Consultation Question 27:

Please share your views below:

No, all weddings should be overseen by a qualified registrar.

Consultation Question 28:

No

Please expand on your answer:

All registrars should undergo official training rather than being simply nominated.

Consultation Question 29:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Weddings should be conducted in the presence of trained registrars to prevent frivolous marriages and marriage ceremonies. It might authorise pseudo-religious weddings by in people with questionable motives.

Consultation Question 30:

No

Please expand on your answer:

They should only be trained registrars as at present.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

It is so important to stress that marriage is a lifelong, serious commitment. We should continue to use prescribed legal wording to ensure that this remains the case and that no frivolous commitments are being made during a wedding.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

It is important that marriage is recognised as a serious lifelong commitment. Some non-legal ceremonies have illustrated how easily the seriousness of marriage could be undermined by creating frivolous venues or circumstances.

Consultation Question 44:

Consultation Question 45:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This would risk cynical practices by those who despise religion. What might be classed as "identifiable" is open to a wide interpretation and should be avoided.

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Marriage was developed as an occasion where the society in which the couple lived would know they had married and could ensure that it was a legal marriage and one they could support. It is important that marriage is openly recognised and supported by the wider community.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Marriage is a serious lifelong commitment and should only take place in situations which stress this. The proposed change would open the door to attempts to make marriage as different as possible to any yet held and just be a race to irrelevancy regarding its serious nature.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Clause 1b should not remove the opportunity for sharing the declaration with those present as witnesses. The requirements are so vague that they do not stipulate that the two people getting married are required to be present at the location at the same time, and to sign the declaration at the same time and place.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

There seems to be an ongoing trend for the regulations to erode the seriousness of a marriage commitment, and the value of the declaration should not be trivialised by the participants inventing their own "marriage" ceremony. It degrades the public perception of what a marriage commitment represents. There should be a core commitment where specific promises are made in a dignified manner.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

1. No one should be permitted to marry without being present at the wedding ceremony
2. Couples must make a public declaration of their commitment to marry each other. This is foundational to legal marriage.
3. Without 1 and 2 above the solemnity of the wedding ceremony and its for-ever commitment is undermined.
4. While the words used can vary they should convey life-time commitment.
5. Words used should convey that each of the two people involved freely consents to the lifetime commitment they are entering.
6. The wedding must have a public commitment. Society and the law have an interest in a public declaration. No wedding ceremony should be decoupled from the law and wider society.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

1. All wedding ceremonies have a greater significance than its just what the couple wants.
Marriage is a vital part of wider society so the ceremony must reflect this wider, greater connection, however small the number of people involved.

2. Thus a wedding ceremony is a public declaration in which wider society and the state have an interest.

Consultation Question 41:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Continual training as laws evolve and society changes is essential

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Giving consent to be married must be done in person, in public, in front of witnesses, as part of a dignified, solemn and serious ceremony. When couples commit for life to be married their consent must be clear for all to see, and to demonstrate it is done willingly and legally, not just signed on a piece of paper.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Allowing un restricted marriage ceremonies to take place, which could be in the middle of nowhere, and without some structured and credible actions and words, totally undermines the seriousness of the commitment being made.

Consultation Question 44:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

There is already considerable flexibility allowed for marriages

Consultation Question 45:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

There should be no restrictions on the religious content of a civil wedding ceremony.

Please share your views below:

Readings, prayers and personal testimonies must all be allowed.

Consultation Question 46:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Civil ceremonies should be combined with a religious service, to save expense.

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Conducting weddings in public is an essential part of demonstrating how serious marriage is, and of its importance for the well-being and ordering of society. Everyone must be allowed to hear the consent to marry being willingly given, and not forced.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Marriage ceremonies must be dignified and solemn, for such a life changing and lifelong commitment, and the location must reflect this. There must be adequate space for witnesses to be present and for the occasion to be seen by the public.

Please share your views below:

Provision of space for witnesses, and in venues that are legally registered, is essential for making the seriousness and dignity of marriage evident. Free-fall or parachute or scuba-diving weddings are neither dignified nor serious.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The law in this country is, except in rare circumstances, conducted in public. The marriage commitment should be the same - made jointly in public in the presence of witnesses. It should also follow a set procedure, not something made up that erodes the dignity of the marriage ceremony. A married couple should be recognised as such because all couples make the same binding commitment.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

See question 42

Consultation Question 44:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

N/C

Consultation Question 45:

Please expand on your answer:

Marriages should ideally be made before God not just the state

Please share your views below:

N/C

Consultation Question 46:

No

Please expand on your answer:

A religious service should always be permitted

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Public access is essential as marriage has very public significance and the service should be visible and accessible to all. Visibility is needed as a protection against forced and fraudulent ceremonies.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

There should be a limitation that ensures the location is a suitable setting for a dignified, serious and meaningful commitment. We do not want to end up having Las Vegas themed weddings which are none of those things, nor any location which is incompatible with the dignity of marriage.

on inland waters such as lakes or rivers,, in the air, and/or, in private homes.

Please share your views below:

Outdoors may not be unreasonable but the other locations do not provide the means for the essential public statement of commitment.

Consultation Question 49:

No

N/C

Consultation Question 50:

No

Yes

No

Please expand on your answer:

Must avoid confusion about the significance of a religious commitment

Consultation Question 51:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This could put an officiant under incorrect pressure. There should be clear guidelines for a location to be acceptable.

Consultation Question 52:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

This would ensure that otherwise acceptable locations become unsuitable because of the manner in which they would be used. Strong safeguards are essential.

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Strong and very clear guidance is needed to avoid mis-interpretation

Consultation Question 85:

Please share your views below:

I do not believe that the proposals would make any significant difference to the number of couples getting married. There is a popular idea that 'having to have a piece of paper' is unnecessary and that all that they require to cohabit is that they love one another.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Marriage ceremonies should be public affairs and there should be no fear in saying there is no reason why somebody is able to get married. A back stop to coercion. Both parties should be at the ceremony and the proclamation that they are wed should be public from that moment. Marriage is a profound event and any thing that reduces the responsibilities of all parties reduces its meaning

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Weddings are public events and have public implications and should remain so. Why would two people who are pledging the rest of their lives together not want all to know.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Reduces the importance of marriage to just an event not something special and life affirming

Please share your views below:

This all depends on how society sees weddings. If it is just a private event then this does not bestow the seriousness of the occasion. How does this cover the safe and dignified expectations to be met.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

1. During every wedding ceremony, the parties should be required to express:

a) their consent to be married to each other AND

b) that there is no impediment to their marrying each other

2. Weddings are ceremonies in which society and the law have an interest. Within the marriage ceremony the wording of any public declaration and binding oaths should be foundational to the legality of the marriage ceremony. Couples already have a large amount of flexibility how they arrange most their wedding.

3. The couple should consent both in writing and by the spoken word to specific phrases showing that both people freely consent to the lifetime commitment they are entering into.

4. This propose sounds as if it would be possible for someone to get married without being present at the wedding ceremony. The marriage should be formed at the point in the ceremony when both parties give their consent to marry each other.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

A wedding is a public declaration in which society and the state have an interest. The couple are making a legal binding commitment to each other for life therefore the seriousness and solemnity of a marriage ceremony should not be undermined.

Couples already have a large amount of flexibility how they arrange most their wedding.

I have been to some pretty wacky weddings in my 70+ years & the place for this freedom of expression is at the reception not during the dignity of an official ceremony.

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

I find this proposal very worrying.

Forced marriage is a problem in many societies around the world including ours. The 'open doors' requirement was introduced hundreds of years ago as a protection against forced marriage.

Also it helps convey the public nature of wedding declarations. Removing this requirement encourages a false perception that marriage is a private matter without any public significance.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

As stated in some of my previous comments, marriage ceremonies should be treated seriously as an occasion when legally binding commitments are made.

Venues should be dignified and safe not simply allowed because marrying couples want them, but because they are appropriate places to hold such a significant ceremony.

Please share your views below:

I have concerns that many of these venues are incompatible with the dignity of a wedding ceremony or the ability to hold legal weddings.

As in my previous comment about forced marriage, how can public accessed be maintained in the air or in private houses? Wedding venues must be public spaces.

Consultation Question 49:

Consultation Question 3:

Please share your views below:

The Pandemic has changed weddings dramatically - reduced numbers of guests, restrictions on personalisation and multiple cancellations and rescheduling due to lockdowns and changes in tiers. This has not prevented large numbers of couples still wishing to marry, as they realise the significance and the importance of being married when the wider world is uncertain. The ceremony has become a more important to couples, and the party / reception less so.

Many couples have had to change their plans 4, 5 or more times; and some have rescheduled at late notice to beat lockdowns and changes in tiers.

Westminster City Council Registration Services has shown during the pandemic, that they can be flexible, responsive and creative. This has enabled us to react quickly and effectively to changes in demand and Government guidance. What has become really clear is just how much work registrars have to do to support couple through the marriage process, particularly when external changes affect plans. This is not limited to telephone or email, but increasingly by social media.

Chapter 4: Preliminaries

Consultation Question 4:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Agreed. In this day and age not sure what purpose residency requirement service.

Consultation Question 5:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes – pre population of information would save time and resources, be in line with GRO modernization agenda, plus focus the couple on what documentary evidence is required (rather than them turning up in person without required documents and wasting time and resources).

Would there be different requirements if subject to immigration control? If not some concern over Sham marriage – one indicator of a sham marriage is lack of knowledge about each other, and referring to notes. How will this be picked up if the couple are online at another location, and / or with third party arranger completing? Additionally may incentivise producing false documents to claim not subject to immigration control, and avoid further scrutiny.

Questions remain -

Would couples be able to start process abroad, inc. other places within UK?

Would Registrars be able to request right to interview or would it be compulsory for all or some couples?

How would Safeguarding role be maintained eg predatory marriage, trafficking – face to face interview allow these issues to be assessed?

What kind of questions will registrars ask in interview? Would this turn registrars into immigration officers - limiting our role to assessing veracity of relationships and documents? If interview too short to assess couple, and if elongated then what benefit is it in having a two stage process.

Concern over the impact of couples having choice where to go for face to face interview – Councils may not know how many couples will come to their service which makes it difficult to plan future service provision.

Consultation Question 6:

another period of time.

Please expand on your answer:

Difficult question – 3 days would benefit overseas couples; 7 days would give more time for investigation but is that even long enough – especially over prolonged closure periods like bank holidays and Christmas?.

If pre population not effective, may have problems identified at interview stage that need time to resolve, so 3 or 7 days not sufficient.

Registrars have public protection role – eg predatory or sham marriage – safeguarding referrals may have to be sent to different local authority if not giving notice within own district. This takes time to resolve.

S24 report on Sham Marriage – would 3 or 7 days be enough time?

Working days not calendar day?

What about where foreign divorce need clearance which takes time

Consultation Question 7:

Please share your views below:

Whilst useful to have this ability given difficulties experienced in Covid pandemic, remote interviews do not allow sufficient assessment of veracity of documents, safeguarding issues, sham marriage indicators etc. Even if in person could be required to attend an in person interview if concerns arose, how to arrange within timescale before ceremony due to take place, especially if prior to bank holidays, prolonged closures, or busy period in offices, when face to face appointments not available for some time.

Whilst we support true reform, need systems to support such as digital document checking system (although that would not necessary be in place for foreign nationals)

Consultation Question 8:

Please share your views below:

Yes, as long same safeguards so not easy route. Needs to be same across all UK – otherwise perpetuate same problems – different rules apply for parties depending on residence. If in person interview close to ceremony date could be less of an issue as likely to be in country where ceremony to take place already?

Consultation Question 9:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes, for the reasons given. Addresses withheld along with place of marriage (and if as per future questions indicate there will be no open doors, less chance of in person objection, so would need to object in advance),

Consultation Question 10:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Should also add - could allow extensions by law, at the Registrar General's discretion to manage extraordinary events such as the pandemic

Consultation Question 11:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The problem with identifying officiant on schedule is that
- couples may not have decided who their officiant is
- officiant may have to change due to ill health etc

Could officiant add own name and maybe any registration / licence number on schedule?

If identify officiant on schedule, and the person changes then there should be a fee for reissuing a Schedule.
If officiant changes on day, and schedule has wrong officiant name, will it still be valid?

Consultation Question 12:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes – this would be need to be possible for obvious reasons.

Please share your views below:

Questions:

Would it be in any emergency / instance? The couple could have had a falling out, officiant may go out of business, decide they are not doing it – it won't necessarily be like a contracted position with an infrastructure to support, where someone else can step in.
What would be the process for change?

Consultation Question 18:

all weddings should be preceded by civil preliminaries.

Please expand on your answer:

Universal Civil Preliminaries for the reasons given in the consultation - registrar are highly trained, independent and consistent; able to maintain knowledge and skills by undertaking same appointments regularly. Clergy are not.

Consultation Question 29:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes, via local register offices. National register held by GRO.

Need regulation / CPD

Consultation Question 30:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes – but how to be decided, criteria? GRO should have the final say. Description of what fit and proper is.

Consultation Question 31:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes. Training on legal requirements could be delivered by register offices, as well as training on conducting if required.

CPD – compulsory experience, must have done so many ceremonies within a certain period of time, so can make sure still practicing. Could pull off Schedule system who has done ceremonies, so easy to manage.

Submit footage of ceremonies and have a complaints process including complaint by venues, not just couples

Consultation Question 32:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes but how to manage?

Consultation Question 33:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes – being a registrar should not be classed as a conflict of interest.

Consultation Question 34:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes – can't cross over between belief and non belief

Consultation Question 35:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Difficulty to police and enforce, and subjective.

Consultation Question 36:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Registration fee to become an officiant could include cost of follow up survey with couples, spot checks etc?

Consultation Question 37:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Not them alone – GRO too. who should behave like GMC.

Concerns around this – some organisations already not overly concerned with compliance with law above their own religious observances (eg [REDACTED] not completing legal words in ceremony with both parties present). How would registrars be able to flag repeat issues with Schedules if not completed properly etc?

Too much Trust. Universal civil marriage would be a solution.

Consultation Question 38:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes, but how will they know? Will they expect local registration service to monitor, inspect, check? If so cost implication, as well as change of role. May put LRS in difficult position if accused of conflict of interest. How reports and complaints to be made?

Consultation Question 39:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes, but how will they know? Will they expect local registration service to monitor, inspect, check? If so, cost implication, as well as change of role. May put LRS in difficult position if accused of conflict of interest. How reports and complaints to be made?

Consultation Question 40:

No

Please expand on your answer:

No. Can see the practical benefits to avoid expiry and still doing ceremonies (but issuing a schedule to a officiant would eliminate this as would check before issue), but concern lists will become outdated very quickly – many added but few removed. How ensure up to date with requirements / training etc? Renewal of authorisation would provide opportunity to review performance against responsibilities, ensure regular discourse on obligations

Consultation Question 41:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes, need to be clear at what point couple are married, and give them an opportunity to not go ahead. Schedule signing is not point of marriage. If is not clear to witnesses the point at which they married, then can you argue they are actually married?

Feel that we still need a form of words to that indicate you married if not in religious rite or ceremony. In the absence of any rite or ceremony need to have prescribed words. Would this be an issue for non religious couples to have an official set of words. Could be as simple as "Do you consent to be married to this person?".

Agree No impediment declaration required.

What happens if schedule not signed, or schedule lost? Is this not turning marriage in written rather than verbal contract.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

No need something – statement of consent. Otherwise doubt as to when married. Something prescribed. If officiant has to testify what happened if marriage in doubt, then how would they remember, if there is nothing concrete. If signing schedule is it, then why the need for a ceremony.

Consultation Question 44:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 45:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Would benefit interfaith couples who can incorporate something significant to each of them

Please share your views below:

Examples would be good as registrars like rules and examples to give guidance. General principles – clearly civil, not identifiable as a religious ceremony, could allow cultural and religious traditions such smashing glass, jumping over broomstick, using ties for handfasting, lighting a candle, period of silence and reflection, particularly if one offs not part of series of religious content that could constitute religious ceremony.

Consultation Question 46:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Doubts as to when a marriage formed – how would this be made clear without resorting to courts. Interfaith couple have Jewish ceremony followed by Muslim ceremony, married when schedule signed, but what if schedule not signed until civil ceremony 10 days later?

Consultation Question 47:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes. No benefit and inconsistent approach across all ceremonies.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Offers more choice.

However the rationale put forward in the consultation, that it will reduce cost is not necessarily the case and could create difficulties for registrars but not for other officiants. The cost of approved premise approvals is not as big an issue as suggested, as cost borne by multiple couples getting married there at that venue in most cases. What is being proposed would necessitate each ceremony location to be assessed (and inspected?) and the cost borne by each couple individually. Also registrars (to protect Health and Safety of staff) are likely to be more rigorous than other officiants who either want the business or put religious duties first.

Please share your views below:

Concerns have been raised about permission from landowners? Who checks permissions – could end up with having multiple couples on same day, if assume can be married at local beauty spot.

What about the weather? What if can't go ahead, or officiant not happy to go ahead but couple want. Could create difficulties for a lone celebrant to refuse.

If ceremony permitted to take place in a hot air balloon – how record place of marriage (Yellow striped balloon drifting over Hertfordshire)? Moored boats – or moving boats? What if the location changes in the course of the ceremony and a border is crossed - where is the schedule returned to?

Consultation Question 49:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 50:

No

Yes

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Doesn't really matter if civil takes place in religious building – the content is what will clear differentiate it from a religious ceremony, and would give more flexibility / choice to couples. Those religions that don't want their buildings to be used can just prohibit their use by civil officiants. But does that mean have to open civil venues (ie Town halls) up to religious and non belief officiants?

Not necessary for law to prohibit it, then up to organisations to decide if want open venues. Venues would have to charge for usage / hire

Independent officiants / Humanists – have no venues of their own.

Consultation Question 51:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

However we recommend Pre approval. we feel many officiants are unlikely to visit in advance? and so how will guarantee safe and dignified location? Based on what couple tell them? They will face huge pressure to proceed even if don't feel safe or dignified as surrounded by guests etc.

Concern that individual civil registrar should not be responsible to decide if location should be approved, but rather the local authority. Would not want a civil registrar to be able to refuse to officiate a ceremony at a LGBT venue for example. Need to guard against discrimination.

Consultation Question 52:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 53:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Pre approval – yes (see answer to Q48)

Possible to have preapproved places, with wider choice and that trustees / owners can pre approve space eg park; approved venues grounds; National Trust / English Heritage cliff tops, riversides etc. Burden will not borne by individuals, and the appropriate control and permissions would follow, otherwise how will officiants know that the owners of land / beach / cliff top etc give permission for use.

Please share your views below:

Local authority. Additional burden offset by not having to license approved venues. Will need to be charged for but makes sense for many regularly used venues / locations etc. and would give couples ideas about what is seemly and dignified. Means couples don't need to do the extra work

Chapter 8: Registration

Consultation Question 54:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Parents information should be taken at the time of the notice. The date and location should be added before it is signed by the couple and their witnesses to ensure all in agreement as to the date and location of the wedding.

If allowing ceremonies in hot air balloon for example, where / how will location of wedding be recorded if travelling? And how will the couple know which registration district to return schedule to?

Consultation Question 55:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Should be able to be registered in any official language of England and Wales.

Chapter 11: Special types of wedding

Consultation Question 62:

Please share your views below:

Not really – concerns about only one party giving notice to both, so registrar not able to determine other party entering of own free will, relying on first party and one doctor. But pre ceremony questioning obviates this ( as a failsafe). It could be considered open to abuse or allegations of abuse. But how to strengthen? no time for objections

The shortened timeline makes it difficult to carry out investigation.

In the case of RGLs – there have been challenge from family about not knowing about the ceremony.

There is a difficulty for those who fall between housebound and RGLs – Dr doesn't think within 28 days so should give housebound notices, then have to give notice for RGL when deteriorates. recommend remove "cannot be moved to a place"

Suggestion for RGL (deathbed) marriages – keep it as a fast track process, and bring in compliance afterwards to validate the marriage ie submitting documents, allowing objections, and not complying would invalidate

Consultation Question 63:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Disagree. Can see what trying to do. But better to tighten up doctors letter and pre ceremony questioning.

Difficulties of this are that terminally ill person may have very little time in which to give notice, even remotely. Taking notice from both parties elongates the process – time and arrangements especially out of hours – additional burden on Registrar. If remotely it is likely that the well party or family member will complete pre population. Able to give notice, have interview and get married all on same day very real possibility, and this would require registrar to be available for whole day (and if this was the case it would need an appropriate fee).

Chapter 12: Fees

Consultation Question 75:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes, should charge a fee, but needs to take into account operating costs higher in London (salaries, travel, building costs), so should be cost recovery fees set locally. Otherwise just replicating same problems as now with other statutory fees, which don't cover the costs of providing the service. These fees could be waived on hardship / compassionate grounds.

Consultation Question 76:

Not Answered

Please expand on your answer:

As in answer for question 75 but (all or part) waivable by LRS on compassionate grounds

Consultation Question 77:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes the option should still continue but fee needs to be locally set at a cost recovery basis, to take into account operating costs higher in London. Otherwise it perpetuates current problems with a fee prescribed by regulation – regular uplifts don't happen in line with rising costs.

Concerns that registrars will be the only officiant compelled to perform statutory ceremonies, and if they are at below the costs, this is an unfair burden on local authorities in comparison to other officiants.

Could have the statutory ceremony being means tested fee, so only available to those who can't afford other options, but appreciate this may be stigmatizing. Should be only available to local residents, especially if at below cost recovery fee.

Consultation Question 78:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 79:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Should be local authority

Consultation Question 80:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Not a standardized hourly rate, as the cost of provision will vary from register office to register office; and from region to region. For example London register offices has higher operating costs inc. salary costs and therefore a standardized hourly rate across the country would be below cost recovery for London. Therefore should have a locally set fee.

Question as to why Independent officiants will be able to set their own rates, so why can't local authorities?

Concerns if Law Commission proposing that the overall fee for civil marriage would be RO fee + travel time only, unless discretionary extras? This will have an unfair impact as costs of staff and running costs higher. How will registration services cover other costs involved in delivering the service – staff time on booking, contact with couples, checking paperwork, rota'ing staff etc.

Also if charging fee in advance what happens when travel difficulties, and travel takes longer than anticipated? What happens if couple dispute route taken, and therefore travel time.

Structure applied to registrars not to other officiants

Concerns raised that if local authorities can't recover full costs of ceremony (inc. back office costs), as well as pay decent salaries, may reduce / lose staff, especially if staff can make more money as independent or non belief officiants. The may skew the market and drive up costs overall, as independent officiants will be able to charge what they like as may end up dominating the market.

Consultation Question 81:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes, locally set but how are additional services determined. Anything about statutory minimum ie Register Office ceremony, so readings, walk in, contact time beforehand, prep work / paperwork.

Its not clear what the Law Commission are suggesting:

1. Talking about booking, administrating,. Pre ceremony discussion, RON, issue schedule etc or duo ceremony
2. Or talking about extras to ceremony

Will cause more problems for couples, as how will they know what they want, menu of costs eg exchange rings £19; readings £20 each or like what we have ceremony for 1 hour.

Consultation Question 82:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Locally set fee

Consultation Question 83:

(1) the fee should be set by regulation at a level below cost-recovery; or

Please expand on your answer:

Locally set, but waivable at registrars discretion.

Consultation Question 84:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes, and to cover future costs of training, complaints procedure, monitoring etc

Chapter 13: The potential impact of our proposals

Consultation Question 85:

Please share your views below:

1. Already wide range of ceremonies in different locations and at different costs available, so costs would not put off many couples, though restrictions on having a ceremony meaningful to them might.

However for some low income couples may be put off – Register Office ceremonies are very limited so may not be able to have guest list they would like; availability of Register Office limited and often its higher income couples who have booked available slots. Answer is to make RO ceremonies more cost effective for local authorities, so can offer more of them and potentially in larger rooms – need higher fee that reflects true cost recovery, or means tested so know offering to those in need.

2. Outside / private houses may encourage couples, but not necessary increase numbers. Widening scope of legal ceremonies may mean more legal marriages. More weddings in this country rather than have to go abroad (less register office as a result). Maybe more legal marriage registered from religious communities but negligible.

Consultation Question 86:

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

1. Cost too low which means less availability, which means option not available to many. this is the result of a nationally set fee which which has not risen in line with costs of provision.
2. Good variety of venues and options available from town halls to stately homes, and at variety of prices

Main cost staff time which may be slightly reduced as only one staff member, but approval process for one venue split between all couples marrying there over 3 year licence. If have officiant has to check location seemly and dignified each time, then that one couple will bear the cost. Costs of registrars little part of overall cost; cost of risk for venues is what drives up costs of venues. Costs of marrying at Approved Venue mainly due to additional on costs hire, flowers, reception, each venue is different

4. Potentially cost is cheaper as not authorized. But paying for 2 ceremonies. Impact on non licenced venues, but these may increase (enforcement action for beach / park) because more formalised

5. Register Office may not be available, so spend more on decommissioned / town hall wedding. Costs going abroad maybe cheaper, and it ties in with the honeymoon etc. so many couples will still want this option.

1. No benefit to couples as does not address the fundamental issue that register office ceremonies are restricted in numbers as they can only be carried out at a statutory fee, and this is below cost recovery for most register offices. They are also restricted to the smallest room with a no frills approach. If the cost recovery issue were addressed and local authorities were able to charge what it costs them to deliver, local authorities would open up availability, and give more couples the opportunity to marry at a low cost, and in nicer surroundings
2. Not sure what savings will actually be realisable. Main cost staff time which may be slightly reduced as only one staff member attending, but the current approval process for one venue split between all couples marrying there over 3 year licence. If have officiant has to check location seemly and dignified each time, then that one couple will bear the cost of this process. So whilst it offers greater choice, our views is that it will not offer savings.
3. Our view is that is not really an issue - many couples having 2 ceremonies either do so as this is what they want ie destination wedding abroad and the legal "bit" done here, and this will not change; or they have a small legal ceremony in the register office or town hall, so the level of saving will be minimal ie less than couple of hundred pounds.

Consultation Question 87:

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it. We would also welcome any data on the size of businesses that are affected by the law or will be impacted under our proposed reforms. :

1. the costs may be prohibitive if it is new venue or venue which only does very small number ceremonies. Otherwise cost effective when spread over a number of ceremonies in 3 years. City of Westminster offers good value for money – its a reasonable fee and includes support from registrars including marketing advice and promotion.

If the venue does multiple ceremonies costs recovered easily over life of licence. there is some examples of local authorities (eg Merton) who offer free (or low cost) introductory licences where venues need encouragement or want to test whether they will get bookings to justify the cost

2. City of Westminster has no issue supplying registrars for ceremonies, and has supported other districts where they have had short term issues finding sufficient registrars for a day. Westminster have expanded the team to accommodate extra ceremonies and grow the ceremony service. Our costs fully reflective the cost of the service to Westminster (to ensure local taxpayers do not subsidise weddings), and are comparable with other neighbouring LAs.

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it. We would also welcome any data on the size of businesses that are affected by the law or will be impacted under our proposed reforms. :

1. Whilst it may offer more choice. it won't affect huge numbers of people who will still choose traditional venues. There is a danger that by removing the approval process, venues lose access to the practical advice registrars offer those venues including marketing and promotion advice, as they will no longer have a direct relationship.
2. The Law Commission proposed scheme may result in less registrars available, as demand will be difficult to predict and therefore resource appropriately. Sessional registration staff are often contracted to work a certain number of days a year eg in Westminster on zero hour contracts 1 in 3 weekends peak period, 1 in 6 in off peak - but if we don't know what demand we are likely to have we won't be able to predict this working pattern, meaning we won't be able to offer zero hours contracts and have to switch to less beneficial casual contracts with mutuality of obligation of offer and accept work, leaving staff in a more precarious position and resulting in many staff choosing to be come independent officiants instead. The best registrars may decide to become independent officiants anyway. If the local authority can't pay what need to pay to retain them, then LAs may not be able to resource to the levels of demand.

3. May result in more bookings for venues.

4. Not necessarily going to mean more ceremonies in England and Wales – our view is that they is likely to be a similar number of weddings, but more spread out across more locations / venues. Destination weddings abroad are likely to continue in similar numbers as the choice of a number of couples.

Consultation Question 88:

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

Currently whilst there may be some frustrations with the current law, registration services run by local authorities are generally well regarded. There is scope for modernisation around the preliminaries for marriage, as rules on residency, public exhibition of notices are outdated and the lack of central checks on couples documents. In addition the requirement for two registrars , and the prohibition of any religious content in a civil marriage, is restrictive and outdated.

Our view is that it will potentially mean less ceremonies for local authorities, which will result in less income and resultant job losses (at a time when GRO modernisation agenda will also result in job losses). This could be mitigated if civil registrars can also act as independent officiants, outside their own local authority. The danger is by opening up to independent celebrants, we will lose the checks and balances already in place.

We are concerned that civil registrars will become the choice of last resort, rather than a positive choice by couples. As such we will be left with small, cheaper ceremonies, during the week that other celebrants will not want to do as they offer no financial incentive. This means we will lose the ability to generate an income that covers other part of the service which do not generate an income. We believe this will be an added burden on local authorities, and it will become increasingly difficult to maintain a cost effective registration service, fully resourced, and highly skilled.

Consultation Question 89:

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

We agree its is complicated and confusing – eg. residency requirement, different processes, rules

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

We feel it will be simpler and should make it easier, but requires reciprocal arrangements across other jurisdictions to be truly effective

Consultation Question 91:

Please share your views below:

1. Income from ceremonies subsidizes other parts of registration service, enabling most to be cost neutral. If not longer possible to generate surplus income from ceremonies then local authorities will have to bear cost of running registration services.

Impact on Local Registration Service if nationally set fees for travel etc, and discretionary add on services , is that for those local authorities where fee does not cover costs, will limit provision to the legal minimum, and this will drive couples into non belief organisations and independent celebrants, who will be able to charge higher fees.

We feel choice is a good thing, and widening the types of locations and venues as well as ceremony content is a good thing. But allowing independent officiants who will not be subject to the same costs, local government checks and balances etc will potentially have a huge impact of the ability of registration services to continue.

Potential local registration services will become the provider of last resort, losing income. It may result in more regional variation in services as each local authority cuts its cloth accordingly – subsidising ceremonies or not. Could end up with the bare legal minimum service as recession and post covid impact bites.

Our concern is that town hall ceremonies not really addressed – these are bread and butter work of local registration service, and support the service to generate income to cover other costs (ie non cost reflective notices, RO ceremonies etc). the registration service controls often their decommissioned marriage rooms, and has exclusive use for ceremonies. If independent officiants and non belief organisations take a proportion of these ceremonies as the couples choice, this then will jeopardise the ability of the registration service to continue to offer them. For example– eg Saturday of 20 ceremonies at Old Marylebone Town Hall, registrars are paid by the hour or given TOIL for full number of hours. However if for example, other officiants make up 33% of those ceremonies, this will result in large gaps in registrars time when idle, but still being paid for. This may result in not being able to justify the cost against income generated, and so will stop offering registrars for ceremonies. Danger registrars will end up with weekday low key, low income ceremonies and lose the larger more expensive ceremonies which generate the income to subsidise the weekday ceremonies, again jeopardising the ability of the registration service to remain self funding and therefore to remain offering those ceremonies. Couples may be left with higher cost non belief or independent officiants who will charge more as have to travel and can set own fees.

Costs of civil registrars will be higher than other officiants by the very nature of their employment as part of the local authority. Costs do not just take into account the salaries of staff involved (plus NI and pension), but the whole infrastructure of the service they work within, so will also include supplies and services; building related costs; internal recharges etc. In addition staff are not productive in a front line service sense for their full 36 / 37.50 hours per week – they will have time set aside for admin duties inc. accounting; training; line management; team meetings; corporate events and comms, plus will have annual leave and sickness.

Won't have intended impact on couples ie reducing cost. Ceremony part often the cheapest part of getting married, and whilst broadening locations and allow content that will make ceremony more meaningful, cost will be similar, or only slightly cheaper

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

I understand that a marriage is the exclusive, intended to be lifelong union of a couple, and a wedding ceremony is the public declaration of that union. It is legally defined, so the words used in that declaration should also be legally defined, even if the couple should wish to add to it. Giving complete freedom of the wording will, if one is not careful, lead it being taken to mean whatever the couple want it to mean, rather than an institution recognised by society from time immemorial.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

A wedding is the public declaration of the couple's exclusive union and is recognised by society. It is not merely a personal matter between the two parties, so the ceremony should reflect the serious nature of the commitment being entered into.

A wedding is a public declaration of a couple's intention to form a lifelong union. Society has an interest in knowing who is married to whom, it is not merely a private matter. Having the ceremony in public also protects against forced marriage.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

As said elsewhere, a wedding is a serious, public commitment between a couple. Permitting a wedding to take place anywhere can prevent it being public and can undermine the seriousness of the event. The location should be dignified and allow public access.

on inland waters such as lakes or rivers,, in the air, and/or, in private homes.

Please share your views below:

There should be no hindrance to wedding taking place in an outdoors location, again, provided the public has access and the location is dignified. The other suggested locations prevent that public access. The only exception might be in hospital or private homes if a member of the couple is terminally ill.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

It should not be possible for someone to get married without being present at the wedding ceremony. Simply signing the marriage schedule is inadequate. Couples would be able to say anything they like or nothing at all. This is a major departure from the public declarations always considered foundational to the legal marriage ceremony. This risks undermining the solemnity of the wedding ceremony and denying the seriousness of the commitment being made. There is already a large amount of flexibility in the wedding ceremony. The prescribed words are minimal and couples can add to them in all sorts of ways. It is not very much to ask that some specific phrases are used to show that both people freely consent to the lifetime commitment they are entering into. The idea that a couple should be able to completely personalise their ceremony comes from a wrong view of marriage. A wedding is not just about the couple. The couple enter into a union which is understood by society and has been legally defined. So society and the law have an interest in the making of a public declaration.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This is against the seriousness and solemnity of a marriage ceremony. A particular ceremony should not just be allowed because the couple wants it, but because it is appropriate for such a significant event. The idea that a couple should be able to choose everything about a wedding ceremony comes from a wrong view of marriage. A wedding is a public declaration in which society and the state have an interest. Unofficial wedding ceremonies have included themes such as Alice in Wonderland, James Bond, Lord of the Rings, Game of Thrones, Marvel comics, Beauty and the Beast, Harry Potter, Star Wars and Flash Gordon. One had a 'Woodland Fairy themed ceremony with ponies dressed as unicorns' while another couple dressed as hedgehogs. It is very doubtful that many of these reflected how seriously marriage should be taken.

Those shouldn't be called weddings.

Consultation Question 46:

No

Please expand on your answer:

It should be official and legally permitted and never repealed.

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Open doors requirement helps convey the public nature of wedding declarations. The open doors requirement was introduced hundreds of years ago as a protection against forced marriage. This is still a problem in our society. Removing the requirement encourages a false perception that marriage is a private matter without any public significance.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Weddings taking place anywhere will undermine the seriousness and solemnity of a marriage ceremony. Venues should not simply be allowed because marrying couples want them but because they are appropriate places to hold such a significant ceremony. There are some specific benefits in a wider variety of venues being allowed (for example churches who do not own their own building). This should not legitimise inappropriate settings. Unofficial wedding ceremonies have taken place in an S&M dungeon, underwater, and at a Comic Book convention with a couple dressed as comic book heroes. This is completely inappropriate and incompatible with the dignity of marriage for venues like these to host legal weddings.

Introducing this would ,are is easier for sham marriages to take place. This is an area that the Home Office already has significant difficulty in investigating. Therefore abolishing this rule makes trying to investigate such marriages all the harder.

My only Conner with this question is how will the responsibility to uphold the dignity and solemnly of marriage be measured. These two words mean different things to different people, so there is a clear need for guidance to be issued to ensure the dignity and solemnity of the occasion is not lost. After all marriage is a solemn commitment between two people and the environment in which it is conducted should reflect this.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

If a couple want to get married it is surely not unreasonable to expect them both to be present at their own wedding! Indeed any law abiding couple would want to be together at their ceremony. How would signing a marriage schedule meet the definition of marriage being a dignified and solemn occasion?

Couples have wide leeway to range their wedding ceremonies as they would like. The few prescribed words that they must say, in accordance with the public declaration, would be a major shift away from this position. Allowing them to say any words that they wish or none at all makes the ceremony simplistic. Again how does this meet the definition of a dignified and solemn occasion. This approach risks undermining the solemnity of the wedding ceremony and denying the seriousness of the commitment being made. The commitment that the couple make to each other is important and showing that they freely consent to the lifetime commitment they are entering into is in mind important.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Getting married is a serious commitment. Marriage ceremonies should reflect this commitment and should not just be allowed just because the couple wants it, but because it is appropriate for such a significant life event.

Couples already have numerous choices about their wedding day, including the ceremony itself. Apart from the two becoming one, so to speak, a wedding is also a public declaration in which society and the state have an interest.

The more that wedding ceremonies are belittled, the less importance they will attract. This has serious ramifications not just for the couple but for society itself. Marriage is an important corner stone for just and tolerant societies. The state should not be therefore be trying to denigrate it so it becomes simply another secular activity with no real meaning whatsoever.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Marriage is a serious commitment between two people. It should be a dignified and also a joyful occasion. Recognising these twin values, we should ensure that venues should not simply be allowed because marrying couples want them, but because they are appropriate places to hold such a significant ceremony.

I recognise that there might be some benefits in a wider variety of venues being allowed, for example where churches do not own their own building), but it is important that this should not legitimise inappropriate setting, such as ceremonies "in the air". This seems to suggest that the test of a safe and dignified environment is almost forgotten. What next, wedding ceremonies at McDonald's or the local fish and chip shop?

So in widening wedding venues, clear rules should be set to ensure any leniency in the current arrangement are not abused.

on inland waters such as lakes or rivers,, in the air, and/or, in private homes.

Not sure how any of the above could be considered suitable for dignified wedding ceremonies.

How can non-religious organisations meet for "worship" The conflating of the two different worlds in this consultation represents some internal logical inconsistencies which do not bode well for the outcome

Consultation Question 26:

Please share your views below:

Public policy can be a transient and illogical as the organizations that nominate and this all sounds very muddled. If contrary to law that is one thing but "public morality" is a very chameleon creature

Consultation Question 32:

Yes

Las Vegas style wedding chapels are the very last thing we need if marriage is to mean anything at all

Consultation Question 33:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Some indicative table of fees should be in place to prevent exploitation by "celebrity celebrants"

Consultation Question 34:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Why would they want to be if they are freelance officiants?

Why would you want to stop them if you permit freelancers?

Consultation Question 35:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

This is meaningless without stating what the dignity and solemnity consists of? If left up to the officiant we again have the potential for a free for all. Is a scuba diving underwater ceremony dignified?

Consultation Question 36:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Is guidance alone sufficient? If there is no specification of content at all then surely a recitation of the telephone directory for 30 mins could suffice?

Consultation Question 37:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The General Register Office or a national body should be responsible. Self regulation easily lapses in to laziness and complacency

Consultation Question 38:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

should be case anyway if the body acts or not. Action itself can be ineffectual by the other body and a mere token gesture

Consultation Question 39:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

if they are permitted which they should not be - see previous response on this

Consultation Question 40:

No

Please expand on your answer:

A time limit of say 10 years or so seems sensible before reregistration

Consultation Question 41:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

orally or otherwise is too imprecise. A deaf couple may express it in sign language but a signed document by an absent party does not seem to be precluded by this loose wording and that is asking for trouble - forced marriage bonanza is not what you intend here I guess? But it does appear to be permitted?

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

With no limits at all? See scuba diving wedding comment previously

This precludes or short circuits dignity and solemnity surely - except the undefined variety which is an Alice Through the Looking Glass approach

Consultation Question 44:

Consultation Question 45:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Does not religious content mean its religious? A drop of ink in a glass of water makes all the water inky?

Please share your views below:

Consultation Question 46:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Covid has shown how difficult arranging a religious ceremony can be - If marriage is important to a religious couple they may well want a religious ceremony following a civil one undertaken of necessity rather than choice? Why prevent this?

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Getting married is by its nature a public event not a private affair like cohabitation.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Some places are intrinsically undignified but if you allow a free for all someone somewhere will go out of their way to indulge in the undignified - a marriage in the Chamber of Horrors for example at Tussauds ?

Please share your views below:

Outdoors seems reasonable

Airplanes and hot air balloons or a kayak do not seem dignified

Weddings are home again preclude or hamper the public significance of marriage

Consultation Question 49:

Civil marriages have the same public significance as religious ones

No

Please expand on your answer:

This appears to represent an actual 'conflict of belief'. The person concerned would have a different understanding of the meaning of marriage from a substantial proportion of those at whose wedding they would be officiating.

Consultation Question 35:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

This is very important, but should be set out more widely. These requirements should extend to the content of the ceremony, not merely its externals. 'Solemnity' should be spelt out in some detail as it may otherwise be purely subjective.

Consultation Question 36:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Subject to this guidance relating only to the actual legal, as opposed to religious, part of the ceremony.

Consultation Question 40:

No

Please expand on your answer:

I think that it would be normal practice to have some time limit (say 10 years) even if renewal would normally be more or less automatic.

Consultation Question 41:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Yes, subject to a realistic view of what comprises 'continuing professional development' in this context. This should be primarily related to any changes in legislation that may be introduced from time to time. Bureaucracy should be avoided at all costs.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

The attendance of both parties at the ceremony should be a fundamental requirement.

The couple should be required to state their consent and lifetime commitment in public. The signing of the Register should merely record their change to legal status. The public nature of the ceremony and its implications for the wider society should continue to be made apparent.

The formality and solemnity of the ceremony should be maintained at all times, although with the variations in aspects (dress, music, setting et cetera) that are already accepted.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

While some of the externalities may be tailored to meet the personal tastes of the couple, the core elements of the ceremony should always be maintained. This should avoid any doubt as to the validity of the process and ensure that those taking part remain aware of the solemnity and wider significance of the occasion.

Consultation Question 45:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Subject to the option remaining for a separate specifically religious ceremony.

Consultation Question 46:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The civil wedding ceremony is a requirement of the State, primarily to register the marriage. A separate religious ceremony (as permitted in many countries) does not conflict with this but can be a particularly important element for religious communities.

Consultation Question 47:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

In order to reflect the significance and solemnity of marriage, weddings should always take place in an appropriate setting. Premises should be registered for the purposes of holding weddings and the necessary minimum standards should be officially checked prior to issuing a registration. Registration should be in place before any weddings can be booked at that location.

Permitting weddings to take place 'anywhere' would undermine the solemnity and dignity of the occasion.

Please share your views below:

Weddings should take place on dry land (subject to the agreement to weddings at sea under certain circumstances) and in an appropriate dignified place . This might include an outdoor setting, for example in a garden registered for this purpose.

Consultation Question 51:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The location should be approved in advance before any weddings can be arranged there. The use of random and unapproved locations should be avoided if the solemnity, dignity, permanence and social significance of marriage is to be maintained and reinforced.

Consultation Question 52:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

As noted in my previous responses I have argued that weddings should only take place in locations that have been checked, approved and registered for this purpose. The safety and dignity of any such locations should be scrutinised in this process in accordance with detailed guidance that should be issued by the General Register Office.

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes, subject to the location being approved in advance and registered for this purpose.

Consultation Question 53:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes, subject to this being a requirement rather than an option.

Please share your views below:

The officiant should be responsible for ensuring that the location is registered for holding weddings or, if it has not been previously, for ensuring that a registration is applied for. The registration process will, as previously noted, ensure that it meets the required standard if it is to be successful.

Consultation Question 56:

No

Please expand on your answer:

In order to maintain the solemnity and dignity of the occasion and to ensure that all concerned remain aware of its significance, the physical completion of the Register should be retained at all times. This may be supplemented by electronic registration if required, but this is likely to fail as a long-term record.

Chapter 13: The potential impact of our proposals

Consultation Question 85:

Please share your views below:

I do not think that the current law discourages those who wish to get married from doing so, neither do I think that the changes which have been outlined are likely to lead to a significant increase. At present it appears that this is very much a 'lifestyle choice' which is not generally influenced by the legal framework. There are few incentives, apart from personal preference, to get married.

Consultation Question 86:

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

This is almost always a matter of personal preference. The social/family pressures that previously directed couples towards marriage are now largely absent. Once they have decided to marry, the present range of options is wide enough to accommodate most tastes. The full range of societal and other factors is allowed for, apart from the absence of dignity and commitment in some instances.

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

The combining of religious and civil ceremonies would be a benefit to many. The use of a variety of locations would be seen as an advantage but this could often be at the expense of the solemnity of the occasion and the emphasis on the commitment that both parties to the wedding make.

Consultation Question 87:

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it. We would also welcome any data on the size of businesses that are affected by the law or will be impacted under our proposed reforms. :

The requirements should remain, though the costs associated with them should be reviewed from time to time to ensure that they are appropriate. The approval of a wider pool of officiants could reduce the cost of individual weddings, depending on the circumstances.

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it. We would also welcome any data on the size of businesses that are affected by the law or will be impacted under our proposed reforms. :

Registration of the venue should remain a requirement. The other potential changes might produce some benefits in update and commercial returns.

Consultation Question 19:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes, proper controls are necessary

Consultation Question 20:

No

Please expand on your answer:

They should be able to officiate at non-Anglican church weddings as at present. Most Christians in the UK are non-Anglican and would not, under the proposal, be able to be married in their chosen place of worship. Ditto Muslims etc.

Consultation Question 22:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

As long as they have appropriate training.

Consultation Question 23:

No

Please expand on your answer:

There would be loss of control of the process and too much variation for marriage to be seen to be consistently conducted across the UK

Consultation Question 24:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The existing civil marriage arrangements should suffice.

Please share your views below:

Far too complicated. Keep to existing arrangements - recognise religious ceremonies by training of officiants, or by attendance by registrar. Non-religious events are, by definition, civil ceremonies and should continue as at present.

Consultation Question 25:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

This helpfully caters for non-Anglican churches

Consultation Question 26:

Please share your views below:

Organisations with 'Purposes that are unlawful' are clearly not fit for officiating at marriage ceremonies.

Organisations with purposes 'contrary to public policy or morality' is going to be too difficult to define. Organisations have a right to be counter-cultural, within the law.

Consultation Question 33:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This conflicts with no. 32. A nominal fee should be charged to cover time and local travel only.

Consultation Question 34:

No

Please expand on your answer:

What is the problem? In terms of their function the officiants are strictly neutral and are performing a legal function. If they are asked to do religious duties in addition, then that is a different matter and the organisation has the right to choose whom they use, and the officiant has a right to refuse the religious element (as at present) and attend as witnesses for all but the essential legal elements.

Consultation Question 35:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Absolutely essential

Consultation Question 36:

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Agreed EXCEPT 1(b). The couple should each be prepared publicly to express that they know of no legal impediment to this marriage. There is no loop-hole in such a statement, whereas silence on the matter, notwithstanding what may be in the preliminaries, could lead to problems later.

Consultation Question 43:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Common sense, and prevents interference from other parties

Consultation Question 44:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Agreed, as long as the minimum essential declarations are clearly made - preferably in a common format across the UK

Consultation Question 45:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Makes sense, as for example, an extract from a scripture could be quoted to encourage the couple, or a hymn played, without it become a fully religious service.

Please share your views below:

See above.

A piece of music

A poem or scripture

A simple prayer of blessing for the couple, by a friend or family

Consultation Question 46:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Certainly no permission need be sought once the State is satisfied as to the validity of the civil ceremony. Assuming of course that the religious ceremony is not on State property!

Consultation Question 47:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

I have no view on this. I would prefer 'open door' but sadly accept that security could be an issue for some weddings.

Consultation Question 59:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

The ceremony becomes legal, irrespective of the cohabitation. Religious bodies may require consummation but that is not relevant to the legality of the contract

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Presumption is a fluid thing! We should keep it clear - you are either legally married through due process (with the legal benefits that marriage brings) , or you are cohabiting and do not enjoy the benefits.

Consultation Question 61:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

The role of an Officiant is a very serious one.

Chapter 11: Special types of wedding

Consultation Question 62:

Please share your views below:

Special provision/exception should be allowed for terminal illness (marriage in a hospice bed, for example) AND for those housebound or long term hospital patients. In the latter case. only when the marriage schedule has already been agreed etc and movement elsewhere is just not possible, and with agreement of hospital.

A prison sentence ought not to forfeits the right to marriage during the sentence. However, I am not sure how best to manage that situation.

In prison on remand (ie still legally innocent) should not be a barrier to marriage 'outside' at the agreed venue - with necessary security of course

Consultation Question 63:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

as with any other marriage.

Chapter 13: The potential impact of our proposals

Consultation Question 85:

Please share your views below:

I think it marginal that there will be an increase in marriages due to these proposals. The biggest block to marriage is the (unfounded) perception that it will cost £000s

Consultation Question 86:

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

Not much change. if couples want a legal marriage these proposals will not make much difference.

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

The biggest bar to marriage is the huge cost of the whole event - not the legal ceremony.
People need encouragement to get married and have a cheap 'whole event'.

Consultation Question 87:

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it. We would also welcome any data on the size of businesses that are affected by the law or will be impacted under our proposed reforms. :

Consultation Question 91:

Please share your views below:

Initial small increase in cost. But new costs will be covered by fee structure which I hope will not be onerous on poorer couples. The fact is that a current license is still 'cheap' - long may that continue. Its the event trimmings that are exorbitant.

Chapter 4: Preliminaries

Consultation Question 4:

No

Please expand on your answer:

It seems to me that we need to take a little care to know details about those intending to marry. They might already be in a marriage with one or more other persons or be criminals or people on the run or using false documents.

Consultation Question 5:

No

Please expand on your answer:

It would surely be wise that notice should be given where both parties live and where they intend to get married. It is in these locations that they are more likely to be known

Consultation Question 6:

another period of time.

Please expand on your answer:

I think three weeks would be the best general rule. Why the rush? If people need to get married in a very short time they can get a special license.

Consultation Question 7:

Please share your views below:

Marriage needs to be treated seriously and a personal interview facilitates this in the best possible way.

Consultation Question 8:

Please share your views below:

I think this should be possible provided that notice should also be given in the place of their residence on land

Consultation Question 9:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Marriage is a public ceremony and to publish details of it on line seems eminently right. On line publication on its own is not sufficient.

Consultation Question 10:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

I think probably yes it enables people to plan ahead.

Consultation Question 11:

No

Please expand on your answer:

It may well be that the officiant might be unwell or die if the marriage is planned several months ahead.

Consultation Question 12:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The substitute should be any person trained and validated by the church, humanist society or institution chosen by those to be married.

Please share your views below:

This question needs to explain 'other circumstances'.

Consultation Question 13:

No

Please expand on your answer:

I can see no valid reason for this proposal.

Consultation Question 14:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Who would want to marry in a war damaged church?

Consultation Question 15:

Please share your views below:

They should be published in the places where both parties have their residence otherwise it could amount to a secret wedding.

Consultation Question 16:

Please share your views below:

Checking is always wise.

I think it is only necessary for the minister taking the wedding service to see both parties.

Consultation Question 17:

Please share your views below:

Yes I think this declaration should be made by both parties at the time the couple request banns to be called. It should be a criminal offence to give false information.

Consultation Question 18:

Anglican preliminaries should continue to be recognised as legal preliminaries to weddings officiated by the Church of England and the Church in Wales;
or

Please expand on your answer:

So long as the C of E is the established church of the nation this should be continued for the C of E.

Chapter 5: Officiants

Consultation Question 19:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes. I agree.

Consultation Question 20:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes this makes sense. People would not plan a wedding in church if they wanted a civil registrar to officiate.

Consultation Question 21:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

What would be the purpose of having two?

Consultation Question 22:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes in the case of the C of E which is a state church at the moment.

Consultation Question 23:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes

Consultation Question 24:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Please share your views below:

You need a precise definition of religion in order to answer this question. What about paganism, witchcraft, Scientology etc?

Consultation Question 25:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

What about an additional wife for a Muslim man or a Mormon polygamist?

Consultation Question 26:

Please share your views below:

I would want to know what is included by public policy or morality.

Consultation Question 27:

Please share your views below:

It depends what it meant by office.

Consultation Question 28:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

It is vital to have persons of good standing.

Consultation Question 29:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This starts to get too complicated and difficult to administer.

Consultation Question 30:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Absolutely. They should be externally checked.

Consultation Question 31:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

This is good common sense.

Consultation Question 32:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

There should be a fixed agreed payment for conducting a marriage ceremony the same for every organisation.

Consultation Question 33:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

The government must fix a standard fee for the basics.

Many churches charge far too much.

Consultation Question 34:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

This saves confusion.

Consultation Question 35:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Absolutely - a no-brainer.

If we don't take marriage seriously we will completely destroy the fabric of our society and our nation. This is what destroyed the entire Roman Empire

2. Supported

3. Supported

4. Supported, providing the signing of the declaration is not regarded as an acceptable substitute for participation in the ceremony!

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

DIY ceremonies devalue the standing of marriage. There is sufficient flexibility within the current statutes for couples to 'personalise' their wedding. It is important that standard forms for declaring lifelong love, commitment and faithfulness remain.

Consultation Question 46:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Any subsequent religious service cannot be a repeat wedding but this provision, if enacted, will need to be carefully worded to retain the possibility that a couple who come to faith after their wedding can still have an appropriate form of service to affirm their vows before God or that married couples can reaffirm their vows on future occasions (as happens now in many churches).

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

A wedding is a public declaration of commitment so the public should not be prevented from witnessing the ceremony unless there are genuine security reasons for having closed doors.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

There needs to be some limit on the appropriateness of wedding locations to maintain the solemnity and dignity of the ceremony. The current licensing system should remain with perhaps the additional flexibility of enabling officiants or their organisations to apply for a special licence if it is necessary and appropriate for the ceremony to be held elsewhere.

on inland waters such as lakes or rivers,, in the air, and/or, in private homes.

Please share your views below:

Outdoor ceremonies should be permissible but NOT on water, in the air or in private homes. Weddings need to remain as public ceremonies with appropriate dignity and solemnity.

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

I think it would be far better if there continues to be a requirement to express consent at the ceremony and also in certain prescribed terms which fully embody the commitment which the parties are showing to each other. Without some formal terminology the marriage ceremony could become a frivolous and meaningless procedure

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

There must be some formula which identifies the seriousness and hopefully permanent nature of the commitment. It is not just a question of what the couple wants, but also what is right for society

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The venue must be a place where dignity is preserved. For example nobody, I hope, would want a wedding to take place in a public toilet.

Please share your views below:

Again I suggest that the dignity of marriage must be preserved also the public nature of marriage. In a home denies public access. Lakes rivers and in the air debase the significance of marriage

Consultation Question 85:

Please share your views below:

I do not think that the current law discourages marriage. providing that we are talking about marriage as a serious undertaking, with long term consequences for both the parties involved and for society in general. The proposals might increase the number of couples getting married, but would that be marriage as a serious commitment for life, or would it encourage frivolous and meaningless marriages of no more value or significance than a party, a night out, a game of chance or a gamble

However, you need to better define "the dignity and solemnity of marriage". What would uphold this and what would not? For example, dressing up as characters from a book or film would, to my mind, not uphold them. Allowing ceremonies to take place in frivolous or distracting locations (or places so themed for the occasion), would not uphold them.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

I do not agree with removing the "prescribed words". Since marriage is one of the foundations of our society and social fabric, the "prescribed words" used in the ceremony show that this is a serious matter and a serious commitment. as I understand it, there is already lots of flexibility in what is said beyond them.

Marriage is for the good of society and the family as well as the good of the couple. It shouldn't just be a self-defined ceremony that they can totally personalise to their tastes. There needs to be a basic set of conditions and assumptions about it.

I do not believe that someone should be able to be married without being present at the ceremony.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

As per my answer to question 42, I do not agree with this. It promotes marriage as just another "consumer choice" and belittles it. Rather, it is about choosing and committing to live with someone for the rest of your days, to love them and care for them, through the good and the bad. The ceremony needs to reflect this serious and solemn commitment as well as celebrating it.

Consultation Question 44:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Why do you want to remove the legal limitations on who can have those types of weddings? I think this could be abused by those who want to force such organisations to hold their wedding. I see no benefit in this for anyone else, or for society as a whole.

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Marriage is for the good of society as a whole, but this proposal seeks to make it a private affair - again I see the "marriage as a consumer choice" concept which seems to be behind a number of these proposals. The declarations in the ceremony should be made in public, not in private.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

I believe that the wedding ceremony must remain a solemn and serious affair, so I don't agree with this. A wider range of locations could be allowed, but there should be limits on this. A wedding isn't a themed party but a ceremony for a life-long commitment.

outdoors,, on inland waters such as lakes or rivers,, in the air, and/or, in private homes.

Please share your views below:

Yes, there should be limits. My concern with having the ceremony outdoors is that our inclement weather could disrupt it. Having a wedding on the water or in the air sounds like a gimmick and undermines what the ceremony is about. The couple can host their reception in such locations after the ceremony. Having the ceremony in a private home again suggests that marriage is just a private affair, but it is not - it underpins our social fabric and is significant to society and the state.

If you do proceed with this proposal, then you need to properly define these terms and ensure there are good base standards, and give examples of what is dignified and what is not. I feel that how to determine the safety of a location is probably well explained by existing health and safety guidelines.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

It should not be possible for someone to get married without being present at the wedding ceremony. Simply signing the marriage schedule is inadequate.

Couples would be able to say anything they like or nothing at all. This is a major departure from the public declarations always considered foundational to the legal marriage ceremony.

This risks undermining the solemnity of the wedding ceremony and denying the seriousness of the commitment being made.

There is already a large amount of flexibility in the wedding ceremony. The prescribed words are minimal and couples can add to them in all sorts of ways.

The idea that a couple should be able to completely personalise their ceremony comes from a wrong view of marriage. A wedding is not just about the couple. The couple enter into a union which is understood by society and has been legally defined. So society and the law have an interest in the making of a public declaration. The logic of a wholly self-defined marriage ceremony is for marriage to be decoupled from the law and wider society. Marriage would become an entirely private matter, rather like a personal hobby

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

A particular ceremony should not just be allowed because the couple wants it, but because it is appropriate for such a significant event.

The idea that a couple should be able to choose everything about a wedding ceremony comes from a wrong view of marriage. A wedding is a public declaration in which society and the state have an interest

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The "open doors" requirement helps convey the public nature of wedding declaration.

The open doors requirement was introduced hundreds of years ago as a protection against forced marriage. This is still a problem in our society.

Removing the requirement encourages a false perception that marriage is a private matter without any public significance.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

I reiterate the seriousness and solemnity of a marriage ceremony. Venues should not simply be allowed because marrying couples want them, but because they are appropriate places to hold such a significant ceremony.

Please share your views below:

There are some specific benefits in a wider variety of venues being allowed (for example churches who do not own their own building), but we should take care that this should not legitimise inappropriate settings.

Some places are totally inappropriate as wedding venues if we are to protect the seriousness and dignity of the commitment being made.

This however is not adequate. Officiants should also have a responsibility to ensure that the content and tone of the ceremony upholds the dignity and solemnity of marriage.

There needs to be a definition of dignity and solemnity of marriage in statute law, rather than leaving it to be established by case law.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This implies that marriages could take place without both parties being present and expressing consent during the ceremony. This is not acceptable. Not making a public declaration would undermine the seriousness of the commitment being made and the dignity and solemnity of the marriage ceremony.

There is already much flexibility in the words that can be used, but some specific phrases should remain mandatory to show that both people freely consent to the lifetime commitment they are entering into by a public declaration.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Marriage is a significant public ceremony, and the ceremony must be appropriate to such a significant event.

A wedding is a public declaration in which society and the state have an interest and the form of the ceremony must be appropriate to this..

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

A wedding is a public ceremony and the requirement for a wedding to take place with open doors, or otherwise for public access to be allowed makes this clear.

Allowing marriages in private encourages a false perception that marriage is a private matter without any public significance.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

I am appalled at the trivialisation of marriage as suggested by the Law Society. Marriage is the bedrock of British Society and the quickie divorce law, which has sadly already been passed, plus these new proposals if passed, will lead to more and more unsupported children in council care homes where most of them are very badly served and commence a life of criminality to the detriment of normal society.

With these marriage proposals it seems to me that the Law Society is hellbent on lining the pockets of its members with even more fees from more divorces.

No, I don't think we should exclude that. Freedom of speech and freedom of thought require us to allow people with abhorrent views both to get married and to express their abhorrent views. I see no reason why they should not be allowed to do so at the same time.

Consultation Question 29:

No

Please expand on your answer:

I don't think private individuals should be able to become wedding officiants just because they want to. They should be nominated by some larger state or belief-based body. This is because marriage is an institution with an authority and value that transcends that of individuals.

Public access is very important. Anyone should be able to attend, so that anyone can see that the couple is married and can object at the appropriate point in the service.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Please share your views below:

Great care must be taken regarding consent in unorthodox venues. A physical means of escaping the ceremony is a very important safeguard against coercion. For some people, the only way to escape forced marriage is to run away en route to the ceremony. On a plane, there is nowhere to run! See also my point above that public access is important.

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

The high costs of marriages today are not to do with the law - they are the fault of the wedding industry and the ballooning costs of dress, cake, car etc. The legal and religious fees are very good value and officials should have the right to raise them if necessary.

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

Allowing elaborate, exotic locations will raise costs, not lower them. It will increase the pressure to marry somewhere exciting and exotic, which will likely be much more expensive than a normal religious building or registry office.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Number 4 implies that the parties don't even have to have a ceremony, this is unacceptable.

The Church of England has a defined ceremony of marriage including public declarations and this is a fundamental requirement that needs to be retained in order to maintain the solemnity of the marriage ceremony; there are however options to add to the prescribed words so there is flexibility. It should not be possible for a couple to completely define what they say

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

As per Q42, the marriage ceremony is a defined set of statements and should continue to be prescribed as such

Consultation Question 44:

No

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

A wedding ceremony is a public expression of a commitment and this should remain, it is also a significant protection against forced or sham marriages.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The dignity and solemnity of a marriage ceremony has already been discussed and places where this should be allowed to happen need to be strictly controlled and not where couples just fancy that the ceremony should take place.

How can such a ceremony be dignified and solemn at a rock concert or in a skydive or scuba dive as currently allowed in the USA as previously referred to.

outdoors,, on inland waters such as lakes or rivers,, in the air, and/or, in private homes.

Please share your views below:

There should be limits on all of these venues, for example how could a ceremony be described as dignified and solemn at an outdoor music festival, water skiing on a lake or river, whilst sky diving or in a private home unless public access were allowed.

Consultation Question 49:

No

Please expand on your answer:

I have already replied to say that marriages are public events and should stay as such

Consultation Question 50:

Other

Other

Other

Please expand on your answer:

All these answers depend on whether the venue is considered to be a place where a dignified and solemn ceremony can take place

Consultation Question 51:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Within official guidelines, otherwise officiants could overrule any decision about whether a venue is a place where a dignified and solemn ceremony can take place

Consultation Question 52:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Again, this is a very open question as the rules for a safe and dignified venue aren't clearly defined

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The marriage ceremony involves more than the couple and the officiant. It is also a public declaration of a life long commitment between the couple and is to be witnessed by other members of the public as part of a society in general and the Law in particular.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Marriage should be a serious commitment made by the couple and should demonstrate the seriousness of their marriage to each other and to show to the wider community that the couple appreciate this. Otherwise, unless the form of words used is unrestricted it can become a frivolous exercise of the lowest common denominator.

But not only the dignity of marriage but also of the ceremony itself which should be conducted in a fit and proper place with duly solemnity and dignity. This should not include the inclusion of loud music and "tacky" surroundings. If marriage is for life then the event of the union of a man and a woman in a marriage ceremony should be a life-enhancing experience. To be absolutely clear could not the Law Commission define what is meant by 'dignity' and 'solemnity' as this would put this issue beyond reasonable doubt.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Both parties need to be present at the wedding ceremony and simply signing the declaration is inadequate. The form of words should include a public declaration of commitment to each other in words which are heard and firmly understood by all those present particularly their witnesses. There should continue to be a prescribed form of words used during the ceremony which may be slightly added to if required but the essentials of commitment to each other "until God do us part" sentiments should remain. Society needs this continuity as does the law.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This if permitted would lead to a trivialised view of marriage and the ceremony itself and the seriousness and solemnity of marriage would be marginalised by some. The ceremony is a significant event and not a 'walk in the park'.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

It should not be possible to make changes to a prescribed marriage contract if it undermines the solemnity of the marriage; both couples must be in attendance at the ceremony, and the wording should always explain that the contract they are entering into is a lifetime contract.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This would allow a free for all attitude to the marriage ceremony, whereas it should retain a dignified atmosphere stressing the importance of the contract, they are entering into. A wedding is a public declaration in which Society AND the State have an interest. To reduce it to some form of irrelevant game show, which is a distinct possibility, sends out the wrong signals. It is not just a bun fight, it is a contract which should set couples up for the serious business of bringing up children, teaching Family values, and embracing friendship, and thus a contract for life.

Consultation Question 91:

Please share your views below:

Whatever the costs, it is important that Government takes steps to stop the trivialisation of marriage in general, and stresses the importance for children to have both a mother and father who stay together, in particular, and build a loving family home and relationships. The ever growing divorce rate is indicative of the disastrous decision making from Government that has resulted in so many broken homes. The growing number of single parent homes, the number of children needing psychological help, the number of people sleeping rough, the growing mental problems within society, are all partly the result of marriage breakdown. Government must advertise and sponsor the necessity of Families to build more tolerance into their marriage, and stay together for their children's sake. Marriage should be encouraged, but it should be explained why. Marriages that stay together produce happier and better adjusted children. The vows that are included in marriage services should be treated with respect, and parents must acknowledge their responsibilities. Government must make decisions that encourage all the virtues of family life, and make it harder for divorce rather than easier, such as their ridiculous 'No Fault' divorce Bill which they voted in!?

Consultation Question 35:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

A clear definition of what constitutes "dignity and solemnity" is required.

This should not only apply to the officiant but also to the content and character of the ceremony. I would not consider it appropriate for a marriage ceremony to be along the lines of a cheap themed party or to be disrespectful to the seriousness of the commitment that marriage represents.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

1. I believe that oral consent should always be obtained during the wedding ceremony as, in the event of only written consent, it may not be clear to the person what they are signing.

Oral impediments should also be requested during the service for other persons to be able to respond to.

2. Persons should not in my view be able to create their own wording to reflect consent as this could be ambiguous, not sufficiently measurable and a step too far from the public declarations which are a key part of the ceremony.

3. Oral consent to still be required.

4. The marriage should be formed at the conclusion of the ceremony and certainly not in the absence of a physical ceremony. A signed document is insufficient and I believe could leave many loopholes for inadequate and uninformed consent, coercive behaviour and sham marriages. A physical ceremony is also a celebration of that special union between two people in the context of public declaration and a legal framework.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

I do not agree that a marriage ceremony should be invisible and personally defined and created at almost every level by the couple themselves as this would undermine marriage from the outset and may well lack a sense of dignity.

Words and behaviour are inextricably linked and this proposal opens up opportunities for themes that are inappropriate for such an occasion. This could cheapen marriage to shallow wording, whims and a sense of worthlessness to what is a serious, legal and reverent occasion in which society and the state has an interest.

"Modern" does not necessarily = right.

Consultation Question 44:

No

Please expand on your answer:

I believe that there should remain special rules and own requirements should continue to be imposed as desired.

Consultation Question 45:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Weddings should continue to be open and celebrated with public access as marriage is in the interest of the public and not only the couple. Open doors enables better scrutiny and helps to protect against forced marriage or sham marriages. Open doors increases accountability for those involved in maintaining dignity and respect and honouring marriage as an institution.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This proposal would undermine the dignity of marriage. Venues must be appropriate in achieving dignity, appropriate behaviour and safety and therefore not held in places such as fast food outlets, pubs and themed conferences among others.

Please share your views below:

I believe that weddings should NOT be held at any of the above venues. Again, a clear criteria is required for what constitutes "safety and dignity" in these settings.

Religious venues should only be used to conduct religious ceremonies .
Religious venues are not just a building but reflect the spiritual nature and significance of the faith that they embrace.

Consultation Question 51:

No

Please expand on your answer:

There should be clear and stringent criteria for the suitability of locations and should not be down to personal opinion.

Consultation Question 52:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

There needs to be a clearly defined description of what "safe and dignified" represents by the General Register Office as this can be open to wide interpretation. There should be a set of standards to be met.
I find it hard to comprehend how these criteria could be met for example in the air or in a fancy dress themed setting.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The amount of prescribed wording is very limited at present but should be kept. There need to be key commitments made that are reflected in the prescribed words. These are solemn promises made between 2 people that also affect society - the prescribed wording allows the service to be appropriately solemn and clear as to what the commitment is. Couples can personalise the rest of the service.

The current proposal suggests that one party need not be at the service - both parties should be present- it should be a public declaration of commitment.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Marriage is a serious commitment and needs to be appropriately dignified and solemn. It is not just personal to the couple but also for the benefit of society and the state. So a solemn , dignified service ( which can of course be joyful) where serious commitments are made is appropriate.

Consultation Question 3:

Please share your views below:

Registration Services across the country have shown during the pandemic, that they are flexible, responsive and creative. This has enable them to react quickly and effectively to the lack of Government guidance, or changes in guidance. What has become really clear is just how much work registrars have to do to support couple through the marriage process, particularly when external change affect plans. This has been by telephone, Email and via social media.

Chapter 4: Preliminaries

Consultation Question 4:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Agree, as this requirement is outdated and causes confusion and unnecessary hindrance for service users and register offices alike.

Consultation Question 5:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Register Offices of London agree with this proposal as it will be convenient to service users and already works in other jurisdictions such as Scotland. It is particularly important to require a second part face to face interview as by meeting a couple in person is how registrars are able to identify sham, fraud, safeguarding concerns and other potential offences. However there are points that require careful consideration prior to any implementation.

First, clarity is required as to where the couple need to be to start the first (remote) part of the notice giving procedure. We would recommend that this can be done from anywhere in the world, but if not legally possible then certainly from any part of the UK, its Crown Dependencies and Overseas Territories to ensure a consistent and fair process.

Second, if a couple can give notice from anywhere to any register office, there is a risk that some more well-known register offices may become overwhelmed with notices whilst others have few to process. There is a recommendation therefore that notices are first fed into a national database and they can then be allocated to certain register offices, at the couple's request or choice, where couples giving notice can view waiting times for processing and make an informed choice.

Third, clarity is essential to understand which part of the notice giving process will be undertaken in part 1 (remotely) and which in part 2 (face to face). It is recommended that document upload is required for part 1 (remote) and that the original documents must be brought to part 2 (face to face).

By separating the notice giving procedure into two stages, this will require extra time for processing by register offices and so the statutory fee of £35 per notice statutory fee will need to be reviewed

Consultation Question 6:

three days;

Please expand on your answer:

Register Offices in London in theory support the three-day option, as this would significantly benefit couples especially those coming in from abroad to marry / enter civil partnership. However, there are operational concerns which must be flagged.

If the second part of the notice giving procedure (the person interview) is the part that requires the production of original required documentation, then three days may not be enough time to resolve issues such as: not bringing the correct or original documentation; not bringing in translations of official document; "clearance" of some documents such as foreign divorces; not enough time for the Marriage Referral Unit to decide whether they wish to investigate the marriage / civil partnership before it proceeds.

Proposing a "two tier" system where "simple" cases can proceed after 3 days but more "complex" cases require a longer waiting period could be seen as not fair and equitable to all, therefore a possible solution would be to mandate that the notice period (part 1) does not start until the registrar is confident to the best of their knowledge that all the correct required documentation is submitted electronically. Clearance procedures can then start prior to part 2.

Consultation Question 7:

Please share your views below:

Agree, with the register office having the right to request in-person interviews where they feel appropriate (e.g. sham / fraud / safeguarding concerns).

Consultation Question 8:

Please share your views below:

Agree, as this will be convenient to service users. There is a currently inconsistency in arrangements for people giving notice where one or both parties are resident in Scotland, Northern Ireland, or UK crown dependencies, which leads to confusion. We therefore propose that couples may start the notice giving procedure regardless of whether one or both parties are England / Wales or not; and that it should be possible to give notice from anywhere in the world, and if not legally possible then certainly from any part of the UK, UK Crown Dependencies, UK Overseas Territories and the Common Travel Area.

Consultation Question 9:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Agree, however for confidentiality reasons it should only display names and no other data about the couple. It may be required for the notice to also display the intended location of marriage / civil partnership, if ceremonies remain "open doors" to allow for objections (see consultation question 47).

Consultation Question 10:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Agree, as it is more in line with customer expectation (as opposed to 12 months from the date of notice). The validity period should be allowed to be extended, in case of a national emergency such as a pandemic, without requiring additional ad-hoc legislation or regulatory amendments (see consultation question 67).

Consultation Question 11:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Part (1) London Register Offices disagree with this proposal if it requires the official to be named at the notice, as couples will wish to give notice of marriage / civil partnership before knowing who will conduct the ceremony, and requiring them to name an officiant in advance may lead to various changes and therefore otherwise avoidable associated administrative work. Furthermore, it is impractical to name a particular person; rather, it should be possible to name an organisation e.g. "Superintendent Registrar of X Register Office" or "A licensed officiant from the Association of X (Non-)Belief Organisation" to allow for flexibility. London Register Offices' proposal would be that the named officiant is added onto the registration schedule at the ceremony, with the officiant being required to give their officiant registration number. It would also be helpful for the schedule to state a proposed location of marriage / civil partnership which may also be amended at the ceremony, so that officiants have an idea of where the couple intend for their ceremony to proceed for reasons of operational planning, but that there is flexibility for the actual location of the ceremony to change before the day e.g. in the event of inclement weather.

Part (2): Agree if the proposal described in part (1) isn't implemented, however any changes to the named officiant or organisation, or indeed proposed location if implemented, must be chargeable by register offices.

Consultation Question 12:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Agree, if a named officiant has to appear on the schedule in advance (see response to question 11).

Please share your views below:

We propose that a substitute officiant may be able to act in any operational "emergency" and shouldn't be restricted to a prescribed list of emergencies.

We propose instead universal civil preliminaries across the UK.

Consultation Question 15:

Please share your views below:

Disagree, banns should be published online and if not possible then at their local Anglican church(es) plus the church where the ceremony is to take place. Preference however for banns to be replaced with universal civil preliminaries.

Consultation Question 16:

Please share your views below:

We agree with both parts of this question, but our preference is for banns to be replaced with universal civil preliminaries.

Consultation Question 17:

Please share your views below:

Agree, but we express a preference for banns to be replaced with universal civil preliminaries.

Consultation Question 18:

all weddings should be preceded by civil preliminaries.

Please expand on your answer:

We believe that Anglican preliminaries to marriage (banns) should no longer be recognised as legal preliminaries, and that all weddings should be preceded by universal civil preliminaries for reasons of clarity and equity for everyone. Reasoning is exactly as stated in paragraphs 4.163 – 4.172 of the consultation document with which we agree.

Chapter 5: Officiants

Consultation Question 19:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes, but we would also suggest that there are other legal duties that should be included:

- Legal duty to report a sham marriage
- Legal duty to ensure that the couple not only express consent to marry but that they are willing to marry
- Safeguarding considerations to prevent sham, forced or predatory marriage

Accountability and responsibilities expected of officiants needs to be defined. All types of officiant regulated in the same way. In order to eliminate inconsistencies for couples and between officiant types.

- Ceremony needs to be dignified – how is this set out ie what if asked to sacrifice as part of ceremonial ritual, would this be acceptable to one officiant but not another

Consultation Question 20:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Yes, in as much as would not want registrars to be responsible for officiating at a religious ceremony, even in emergencies. But wouldn't want registrars to be precluded from being independent officiants.

Consultation Question 21:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes, unless operational reasons why may require two ie remote location or late timing of ceremony, but that will be the decision of the local authority. Some consideration needs to be made if one officiant; couples generally want additional services which are offered at register offices such as; announcements; doors held for entrance of bride/groom; music played etc This could not happen if one officiant, family and friends would need to organize separately..

Consultation Question 22:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

We believe Universal civil marriage would eliminate the processes and difficulties raised in the consultation.

- Everyone would follow the same procedure at the same regulated cost. This would eliminate uncertainty of couples with different policies according to organization.
- Have religious venues been asked if they would like Register officers to come to their religious building to complete the required paperwork leaving them to conduct the religious ceremony knowing paperwork correctly completed.

If Humanists a belief system, then officiants need to be signed up to a list from that organization and practicing more than one or two ceremonies in their lifetime. In essence a period of observation/training before they can officiate on their own. Other wise open to anyone applying to be an officiant to do friends/ family ceremonies and the officiant list too long and unwieldy. Therefore should officiants have to carry out a number of ceremonies per year ?

Please share your views below:

The definition of non-religious belief organisations is very narrow, is effectively a description of humanists and takes no account of other groups such as atheists, agnostics or Druids.

What about beliefs about marriage and the roles of each party to a marriage, to promote strong family connections and therefore strong and stable communities in which to bring up families?

Consultation Question 25:

Please expand on your answer:

We believe Universal civil marriage would eliminate the processes and difficulties raised in the consultation.

Consultation Question 26:

Please share your views below:

Yes must have morality and decency

Consultation Question 27:

Please share your views below:

Yes, but also for civil marriage – Deputy Superintendent Registrars / Superintendent Registrar at such and such Register Office

Non-religious belief organisations must be accountable – if a shared belief these must be identifiable as part of the ceremony to distinguish between that of a civil marriage and non belief marriage. If they are not then officiants in this category can be anyone

Consultation Question 28:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

As well as a national register administered by the General Register Office, there should also be a nationally recognised form of training and accreditation together with CPD and performance monitoring / professional standards.

Should be a charge to join the list to ensure legitimate applications as officiants

Should be a code of practice ensuring appropriate behaviour and ultimately a disciplinary scheme for officiants not adhering to the standards.

Consultation Question 29:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes – and see above answer with regards to standards of professional training and conduct.

Consultation Question 30:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes – but how “fit and proper” to be defined and decided, what will be the criteria? Suggest GRO should determine and provide a description of fit and proper. Would suggest that rather than fit and proper, ‘solemn and dignified’ might be a better definition for this purpose.

Consultation Question 31:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes. Training on legal requirements could be delivered by register offices, as well as training on conducting if required, for a cost recoverable fee.

CPD – should include compulsory experience ie, must have done certain number of ceremonies within a period of time, to ensure and maintain knowledge and practice. Otherwise should be removed from list of officiants. This should be easy to determine if officiants names are on Schedules – a report could be run from the Registration System.

Consultation Question 32:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes, this should be about marriage and not profit - but how will this be managed and overseen?

Perhaps this concern could be eradicated by universal civil preliminaries and universal civil marriage.

Would fees be presented to GRO as a way of ensuring fees are not for profit. Would there be a need to be a cap of fees if too high. In essence this is to make marriages cheaper for couples, yet independent officiants seem to be able to charge any fee so how will this be monitored.

Consultation Question 33:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes – but being a registrar should not be classed as a conflict of interest.

Registrars should be able to officiate on the same footing as an independent officiant.

Consultation Question 35:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Agreed but would question how this is to be enforced, especially for independent officiants who have no affiliated body.

the officiant as they are on their own is not being forced by the ceremony party to carry out aspects of the ceremony that do not conform with an agreed structure or content But also that Issues of security of paperwork and amendments made and who responsible for the return of the schedule. .

Consultation Question 36:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Agreed, but how to monitor enforcement? Registration fee to become officiant should be levied, which would include the cost of follow up survey with couples, spot checks etc?

Consultation Question 37:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Not them alone – GRO too, similar to the role of GMC.

Concerns around this – some organisations already not overly concerned with compliance with law above their own religious observances (eg [REDACTED] [REDACTED] not completing legal words in ceremony with both parties present).

How will registrars be able to flag repeat issues with Schedules not completed properly etc?

Too much Trust. Universal civil marriage would eliminate these issues.

Consultation Question 38:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes, but how will they know? Will they expect local registration service to monitor, inspect, check? If so there is a cost implication, as well as change of role. May put LRS in difficult position if accused of conflict of interest. How reports and complaints to be made?

Consultation Question 39:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes, but how will they know? Will they expect local registration service to monitor, inspect, check? If so, cost implication, as well as change of role. May put LRS in difficult position if accused of conflict of interest.

Need to ensure there is a complaints system, to allow feedback and removal from the list if required.

Issue with the use of Independent Officiants is how do you ensure couples get a good experience. The market would say they won't be used again (and as above should therefore be removed from the list of officiants as not carrying out certain number of ceremonies in a prescribed time period), but could have ruined a couple's ceremony, and the couple would have had little recourse to resolution.

How would this be possible if the number of officiants is excessive. Inspectors cannot police all the individuals therefore best fit would be Local authority register officers to check compliance

Consultation Question 40:

No

Please expand on your answer:

No. Can see the practical benefits to avoid expiry and still doing ceremonies (but issuing a schedule to an officiant would eliminate this as would check before issue), but concern lists will become outdated very quickly – many added but few removed. How ensure up to date with requirements / training etc? Renewal of authorisation would provide opportunity to review performance against responsibilities, ensure regular discourse on obligations

Must be a renewal system with GRO or the organization required to update their lists at intervals. If you leave an organization ie your belief system changes, you should be taken off the list. Needs to be security built in to requirements for access to systems.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

1.

A) Yes. Consent must be expressed in some form whether verbal or non-verbal.

Clarity must be provided and specified at what point during the ceremony the couple become married.

B) Any impediments should be addressed in the preliminaries/notice waiting period. Unlikely for couple to announce they know of an impediment just before their ceremony.

2) Yes.

To ensure regulations are not open to abuse e.g. forced marriages. All ceremonies are conducted in the same way under particular faith/non-religious belief for consistency and fairness (with added elements from couple)

Need to clarify - are the witnesses witnessing couple exchanging words or signing schedule? (similarly, to Civil Partnerships)

(3) Yes. As schedule is the legal record so signing confirms consent even if it expressed verbally.

(4) Much the same as civil partnerships – no prescribed words. Couples for CPs have a choice whether they would like to repeat wording or just sign the schedule.

Does this mean marriages will be offered the same choice as CPs?

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

We agree that more choice is a very good thing and we agree that locations should not have to be publicly accessible or regularly available to the public, but that the rationale of more choice will reduce costs is debatable depending on the location.

£1000 for a hotel approval for a place of marriage plus the cost of staffing an event and individual cost of Risk and Health and Safety assessments could well increase the cost depending on how often the event is used.

If it were an outdoor space, what happens if the weather is inclement? Who would be responsible for booking an alternative venue and who makes the decision that the weather stopped the venue being viable?

The Schedule would need to be changed by the officiant in the case of an emergency change of venue.

Permission would still need to be sought from the landowners, ie parks and council areas and properties. Royal parks charge a fee or issue chargeable licenses/permission for photographs taken within their gardens. Will this be the role of the officiant to ensure that this permission is gained/granted?

There could be multiple couples on the same site, who would police this and how would this be resolved if there were an issue.

Church of England will not allow non-religious weddings to be undertaken on land they own.

Please share your views below:

At Home, there is the issue of Health and safety Risk Assessments and the psychological way that people behave in their own homes. How would you control numbers in a private property?

2 Registrars could attend but officiants will only send 1 person. At present for RG's license and Housebound there are normally only a few people present.

Need to consider staff allergies, ie animals and the cleanliness of private properties.

Outdoors

How would you record the location? In Scotland they record the co-ordinates of the ceremony. How do the couple advise people where to attend? Consider practical issues, accessibility GPS co-ordinates, facilities.

Air and Inland waters and Rivers. Who issues the schedules. What happens if you drift into another Country, county or district.

Consultation Question 62:

Please share your views below:

Consideration should be given to a “provisional marriage” with a process after for validating in cases of terminally ill persons.

In relation to RGL's another location should be an option as the person who is terminally ill could be moved from home to hospital to hospice which would require a further application and causes undue stress on the parties involved.

The validity of the licence should also be extended.

There is a crossover with Housebound/ seriously ill in some instances and the waiting period can be an issue where illness is a factor

Consultation Question 63:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The terminally ill person may have little time to live, by requiring a notice in person this adds unnecessary time and stress to the process; the pre-ceremony questioning covers the legal requirements to proceed.

The prescribed information in the Doctor's letter could be expanded to ensure all of the requirements are met for an RGL licence which would then speed the notice and approval process even further lessening the distress caused to couples.

Chapter 12: Fees

Consultation Question 75:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes, should charge a fee, but needs to take into account operating costs higher in London (salaries, travel, building costs), so should be cost recovery fees set locally. Otherwise just replicating same problems as now with other statutory fees, which don't cover the costs of providing the service. These fees could be waived on hardship / compassionate grounds.

Consultation Question 76:

(1) the same fee as other cases in which the registration officer must travel to the person giving notice, set nationally on a cost-recovery basis; or

Please expand on your answer:

As above but (all or part) waivable by LRS on compassionate grounds

Consultation Question 77:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Yes the option should still continue but fee needs to be locally set at a cost recovery basis, to take into account operating costs higher in London. Otherwise it perpetuates current problems with a fee prescribed by regulation – regular uplifts don't happen in line with rising costs.

Some authorities suggest that statutory ceremonies should be abolished – they were introduced as an alternative to a church marriage for those who could not marry in church at that time. No longer needed as there is a great choice of locations, venues and prices. Concerns that registrars will be the only officiant compelled to perform statutory ceremonies, and if they are at below the costs, this is an unfair burden on local authorities in comparison to other officiants.

Could have the statutory ceremony being means tested fee, so only available to those who can't afford other options, but appreciate this may be stigmatizing. London suggested they should be only available to local residents, especially if at below cost recovery fee.

Consultation Question 79:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

By local authority

Consultation Question 80:

Not Answered

Please expand on your answer:

Not a standardized hourly rate, as the cost of provision will vary from register office to register office; and from region to region. For example London register offices has higher operating costs inc. salary costs and therefore a standardized hourly rate across the country would be below cost recovery for London. Therefore should have a locally set fee.

Question as to why Independent officiants will be able to set their own rates, so why can't local authorities?

Concerns if Law Commission proposing that the overall fee for civil marriage would be RO fee + travel time only, unless discretionary extras? This will have an unfair impact as costs of staff and running costs higher. How will registration services cover other costs involved in delivering the service – staff time on booking, contact with couples, checking paperwork, rota'ing staff etc.

Also if charging fee in advance what happens when travel difficulties, and travel takes longer than anticipated? What happens if couple dispute route taken, and therefore travel time.

Structure applied to registrars not to other officiants

Concerns raised that if local authorities can't recover full costs of ceremony (inc. back office costs), as well as pay decent salaries, may reduce / lose staff, especially if staff can make more money as independent or non belief officiants. The may skew the market and drive up costs overall, as independent officiants will be able to charge what they like as may end up dominating the market.

Consultation Question 81:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes, locally set but how are additional services determined. Anything about statutory minimum ie Register Office ceremony, so readings, walk in, contact time beforehand, prep work / paperwork.

Its not clear what the Law Commission are suggesting:

1. Talking about booking, administrating,. Pre ceremony discussion, RON, issue schedule etc or duo ceremony
2. Or talking about extras to ceremony

Will cause more problems for couples, as how will they know what they want, menu of costs eg exchange rings £19; readings £20 each or like what we have ceremony for 1 hour.

Chapter 13: The potential impact of our proposals

Consultation Question 85:

Please share your views below:

One - The current law is not complicated and allows for low cost ceremonies to take place. The law has enabled couples' access to a great deal of choice and costs including the ability to have a ceremony at a lot of different locations. The inability to have a ceremony outdoors is a limiter for some couples.

Some low-income couples are being put off or excluded by limited statutory provision. If conducting Register Office ceremonies was made more cost effective for the local registration service access could be improved. Currently a large number of the people having statutory ceremonies fall into the higher income bracket. If means testing were introduced access could be more easily protected for people that need a statutory ceremony through need rather than choice.

The law around residency is restrictive for some couples, particularly people coming from overseas.

The requirement to declare biological sex as part of the notice taking process has led to those who are cisgender having a more favourable and easier route to marriage. Those who fall outside this scope often disregard legal ceremonies as a pathway open to them. The current law is prohibitive as it fails to take into consideration or recognize intersex persons as part of the notice taking process and there currently is no avenue for them to declare themselves as such. In addition to this, as gender is not taken into account, those who identify as non-binary or without gender are without recourse to have this information recorded.

Two – The proposals would allow for more ceremonies to be recognised by law, particularly Islamic ceremonies. In many areas the current law means that many mosques choose to not be licensed to conduct ceremonies.

Making more ceremonies legal would create additional protection for any vulnerable party including some woman who are currently wrongly misled into believing they are married in law when they are only married under their religion. The changes would make it an offence to purport to be a legal ceremony, this would be a positive development.

Whilst the proposed change would widen the scope of what type of ceremony would be determined as a legal marriage; the expectation that this will lead to an increase in choice will not necessarily result in an increase in the number of ceremonies taking place. The outcome may not be as intended, and the changes could result in fewer statutory ceremonies taking place.

Consultation Question 86:

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

One – The current national statutory fee is set too low (particularly in London where costs are higher) The consequence of this is that appointment availability is low as the fee that can be charged does not cover the cost of delivering the service. This issue would be resolved if the local registration service is permitted to set its own fee for a reduced-price ceremony.

Two – The ability to set fees locally greatly helps to ensure a good supply of ceremony slots and allows for the registration service to offer commercially viable and cost effective options in order to cater to all members of the local community – resulting in more choice. Currently, the fee charged to the local registration service to officiate a ceremony reflects a very small percentage of the total cost charged to a couple when they have a ceremony at an approved premise.

Three – Religious institutions are permitted to charge a ceremony fee appropriate to that as set by the diocese and other religious executive Boards, however, the local registration service is currently prohibited from setting fees that recover the cost of attending registered buildings.

The cost of attending a church or other religious building does not cover the cost of providing the service, fees do not reflect the increased costs of London. This impacts our resourcing model.

which in turn limits the ability of the local registration service to supply staff. There is a big cost in sending staff to attend religious ceremonies as other services that attract a higher fee need to be scaled back in order to be able to attend.

The law could be improved if religious buildings were required to have their own Authorised Person or if the fee were set at a local or regional level.

Four – The local registration service believes that the cost of hiring an unlicensed venue is cheaper than it would be were the location to be licensed, as the structure would not be consistent or formalised. Licensing a venue adds value and in turn a premium price.

Couples currently have to pay two fees, one for the legal ceremony and another for the unlicensed venue, a change to the law would allow the whole process to be done in one go with the potential for a cost saving. An unintended consequence of the change could be that the increased hire charge for new outside legal venues cancels out the cost of what are normally statutory ceremonies.

Five - Evidence suggests that most couples choosing to have a second non legal outside ceremony choose to have a ceremony for the statutory £57 fee first. The fee is not substantial, and the saving of this fee is likely to be offset by landowners raising their hire costs once the land can be used for legally binding ceremonies.

The result of couples taking statutory fee ceremony slots before larger non-legal ceremonies reduces statutory availability and comes at the detriment of those that need them because they are on a low income.

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

One – These two points are not mutually exclusive. The proposal does not deliver a benefit as the low fee that can be charged for a statutory ceremony is and would continue to result in a low supply of statutory ceremonies being offered. Typical register office availability is no more than one statutory ceremony per week and normally much less, the result is long waiting times for couples and reduced access for those on the lowest incomes. Low income couples are often competing with wealthier couples for the few slots available. If fees could be set locally appointment supply could be improved whilst still enabling an affordable service to be offered to those that need it most. Means testing could be applied to ring fence access to those in the most need, this would be in keeping with the commissions aim to reduce the cost of getting married or forming a civil partnership.

Two – Currently the cost of approving an approved premise is spread across the cost of a three year plus license period meaning the incremental cost per couple is minimal.

In the event that pre-approval costs could not be charged to the couple, but the local registration service is still required to attend the changes would place an additional cost on the local registration service or person conducting the ceremony. Costs would need to be passed onto couples by way of the fees charged.

There is the potential for significant costs including for health and safety, risk assessments and additional hire costs for the couple such as access to an alternative inside location in the event of inclement weather.

For couples in pursuit of a dream wedding these proposals will deliver more choice but would not deliver a saving. there is no proposal to impose a price cap or pricing controls on what celebrants can charge. The changes are likely to result in higher charges to couples and higher costs for the local registrations service and local authority planning and licensing teams having to monitor a wider range of ceremony locations.

Three – There will be some savings but not necessarily over two ceremonies. There will be small savings but only if the second location does not increase its costs.

Consultation Question 87:

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it. We would also welcome any data on the size of businesses that are affected by the law or will be impacted under our proposed reforms. :

One – The current fee for licensing a new approved premise can be prohibitive to new venues, particularly smaller venues. Some venues may not wish to pay the upfront fee in case they do not get any ceremony bookings. The fee can be seen as regressive and not a significant obstacle to larger venues. There is evidence of best practice within the local registration service including register offices deferring fees until venues get a confirmed booking or establishing different tiers of fees based on venue size or annual turnover. There are significant differences in fees between areas, each local authority needs to understand its local market.

Two – The registration service typically works on the basis of it being accepted that if a couple book a ceremony a registrar will be found to allow it to take place. The ability to charge a fee that reflects the cost of attending an approved premise enables this to happen.

The local registration services support the proposal to move from two to one registrar having to attend a ceremony owing to the cost saving and the ability for more ceremonies to be covered at a given time.

If fees are determined by law and not set locally the availability of registrars would be reduced which could be offset by the use of independent celebrants.

Changes to the law are likely to result in the local registration service conducting lower cost and more weekday ceremonies versus independent celebrants who are likely to want to officiate the more profitable elements of the ceremonies market – such as large weekend ceremonies. This could have negative implications for the long-term supply of registrars particularly if registrars switch from being employed by the local authority to independent contractors. Local register offices may face issues sourcing staff. Allowing local authority registrars to also work independently would offset this risk. Offsetting the risk is important as ultimately registrars will be the point of last resort should an independent celebrant not be able to attend a ceremony.

13.61

One – The current fee for licensing a new approved premise can be prohibitive to new venues, particularly smaller venues. Some venues may not wish to pay the upfront fee in case they do not get any ceremony bookings. The fee can be seen as regressive and not a significant obstacle to larger venues. There is evidence of best practice within the local registration service including register offices deferring fees until venues get a confirmed booking or establishing different tiers of fees based on venue size or annual turnover. There are significant differences in fees between areas, each local authority needs to understand its local market.

One – The cost to a venue would be less but this would come at the cost of health and safety and risks false selling, there are risks to the consumer and those attending ceremonies with this approach.

Venues would lose the current practical advice that the local registration service provides as part of the approved premise licensing fee. Market advice and the relationship between venues and the local authority will be lost if a system of pre approval is not in place. Less regulation could lead to a rise in false selling, misrepresentation and sham venues resulting in high legal fees from lawsuits by those impacted by a less rigorous system.

Two – The supply of registrars may be less if registrars switch from working for a local authority to become independent celebrants. Demand will be difficult to predict which will impact our resourcing model.

Three – The law would enable this to happen but there is a question mark over whether this option would be in high demand.

Four – People getting married overseas will still do that, the changes are likely to see more spread of ceremonies but not necessarily an increase in the total number of marriages and civil partnerships taking place. The proposals do provide the scope for more business opportunities including allowing local authorities to open up their property portfolios, this could see more ceremonies taking place away from register office buildings.

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

The changes have the potential to turn register offices into quasi approved premise venues as this may be the only way to ensure their viability in the future. Local authorities may be able to generate income from the changes, but this may not be for the benefit of the local registration service but a benefit for the local authority property portfolio.

If fees are set nationally, they may not cover the service costs, particularly in high cost areas like London resulting in the local authority and taxpayers having to cover the cost. The potential for unintended consequences is quite great particularly if demand is diverted away from the LRS making the business unsustainable as there are no cross subsidies. There are benefits of cutting costs if fees are set locally and not nationally.

There is a mixed picture, less ceremonies will result in less income which puts the delivery and availability of other services at risk. This is at a time when the General Register office has an agenda that presents risks to local authorities.

The opening up of ceremonies to independent celebrants would result in a loss of checks and balances provided by a local authority. Many couples will still want traditional venues. Register offices depend on casual and sessional staff to do ceremonies; this will become harder to achieve if these staff switch to being independent celebrants who cannot also work for a register office. It will also be hampered if a local authority cannot afford to pay the rates that an independent celebrant can be paid working in an environment with no fees capping.

The local authority is the safety net, for example if an authorised person from a church cannot attend a ceremony at the last moment, the changes risk the local registration service not being able to assist on demand if these proposals are put into place. There is a danger that the local registration service will not be able to pick up problems at a none cost recovery level.

Consultation Question 89:

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

One – The current law is complicated and confusing

Two – The current law is prohibitive and takes away choice and ease from overseas residents who are interested to marry legally in England and Wales.

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

One – The proposed changes will ease the pressures faced by couples wishing to marry in other jurisdictions.

Two – The proposals should make this easier but reciprocal arrangements with other UK jurisdictions will be required. The new residency requirements would make it easier for people coming from overseas to give notice. Opportunities for wedding tourism may be opened up.

Consultation Question 91:

Please share your views below:

One – The proposals are likely to have a significant cost to local authorities when changes to processes, contracts and competition are taken into account. There is a risk of reduced revenue streams if local authorities cannot set their own fees and with added competition from a more spread out market with independent celebrants.

There is a huge cost of unintended consequences including:

Being seen as a provider of last resort officiants and not having the ability to fulfil this role

Losing the ability to cross-subsidise less profitable services

Lack of commercial viability

Local authorities trying to escape costs and move to providing the legal minimum in a post-pandemic world

Services need to be able to operate at a cost neutral level with some services subsidising others. Local authorities risk being left with limited provision if this is not allowed

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Both parties should be present at the wedding ceremony. Signing the schedule without being present at the ceremony is unacceptable. The prescribed phrases should be used to express the parties' consent to marry and to publicly state that there is no impediment for them to do so. Personalisation of a marriage ceremony at the expense of agreed legal content undermines the seriousness of the lifelong commitment being entered into.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

A ceremony should be appropriate for the seriousness of the event. A wedding is not just about two people but a public declaration in which society and the state have an interest.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The marriage ceremony should follow the prescribed and solemn commitment to each other, that there are no impediments to the marriage and that the couple understands that this is a solemn and serious lifetime undertaking. It is not sufficient to just sign a marriage schedule

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Why not retain both a verbal expression of freedom to marry (ie no legal impediment or coercion) and a signing of the register? This seems to me to be the very minimum of what's required to satisfy the law and to affirm the place of marriage within society.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Marriage is a serious business, not a charade or a game. If the couple want to live out their fantasies afterwards then that's fine but the core of the ceremony itself has to have gravitas and legal weight.

No

Please expand on your answer:

Why should this relaxation be necessary? What's wrong with having an officially recognised venue? As I have said in previous answers, marriage is a serious business. In what other kind legal contract are the two parties given discretion to decide on what and where and how it is to be sealed?

I would suggest maintaining the established process of notification of intention to marry, the current array of licenced individuals to carry out the ceremony, the minimal but legally recognisable words of the marriage ceremony uttered by both parties in person, at an already approved indoors venue with 'open doors', and concluded by the couple and their witnesses signing the marriage register.

"Contrary to public policy or morality" is too subjective an assessment. It would risk those with unpopular but entirely legal views being excluded from nominations officiants. ### Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The prescribed words form a foundation for the declarations that are required for a marriage. The commitment made in marriage must be taken very seriously. Allowing completely personalised wedding ceremonies without any legal-required words would give the impression that that marriage is an entirely personal one with no recognition of its communal impact.

Consultation Question 43:

Non-legally binding ceremonies can already be personalised. Personailisation will damage the dignity of marriage

'Open Doors' is a valuable part of the wedding day celebration highlighting that marriage is not a private affair but important to society as a whole. It is also a way of protecting from forced marriage and bigamy.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This would open the door to inappropriate venues being used and with no guarantee to the dignity of the ceremony due to the lack of precision on what is meant by a dignified venue. The Law Commission has made it clear that it sees no objection to weddings 'in the air', suggesting that the term 'dignified' and 'safe' could be open to very broad interpretation. It would allow ceremonies to take place in inappropriate places and therefore trivialise marriage.

Consultation Question 3:

Please share your views below:

From a Registration Service point of view the biggest problem was the fact we could not extend the validity period of the Authorities for couples to marry. This meant couples having to come in again to give Notice and in some cases applying for waivers to reduce the 28 day waiting period. The Registration Service had to pick up the cost of this appointment and waive the statutory fee. Also with couples living in different districts to where they were marrying in we were reliant on other Services being open and being able to accommodate couples for a fresh Notice. Complete waste of time and resource.

In addition the absence of an electronic facility for Notices to be given remotely also caused issues and exposed staff to more risk in face to face appointments.

Chapter 4: Preliminaries

Consultation Question 4:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Serves no purpose and makes it difficult for some couples to provide Proof of Address.

Consultation Question 5:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Agree that there should be an online system. However, do we wish to include by post as our experience shows that the postal service is not always reliable and if a person chooses to give Notice by post this will need to be input into an electronic system and will take time. Would be better for them to do it either online or in person?

Not sure how this system would fit into current Sham marriage reporting. The couple would both need to attend this meeting.

Consultation Question 6:

another period of time.

Please expand on your answer:

7-14 days would work better to allow time for admin processes and Sham marriage reporting and Home Office interview if required. How will Home office interview fit in with this proposal?

Consultation Question 7:

Please share your views below:

Remote interviews to be recommended with option of an in person interview for some couples including those where there is some doubt about their reasons for marrying.

Consultation Question 8:

Yes

Consultation Question 9:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes. Online would be an improvement but does it have to be restricted to a Register Office to allow access for the public to view? Could it have a wider audience?

How would public contact the Registration Service to ask for access to Notices?

Consultation Question 10:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes but can this be extended if a pandemic arises please.

Consultation Question 11:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

1.Yes agree. How will couple know which officiant to select and how will this work? Will registration officers also be able to work as independent celebrants?

2.Yes. Will there be provision for schedules to be amended manually in case of sickness at short notice?

Universal Civil preliminaries to be implemented. In our experience members of the clergy are not experienced in dealing with documentation and sham marriages.

Chapter 5: Officiants

Consultation Question 19:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Will this schedule or document still require a wet signature using registration ink?
Appropriate training to be in place.

Consultation Question 20:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Agreed

Consultation Question 21:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes and this would reduce cost for couple and Local Authority. This would increase the capacity for more ceremonies to be offered at peak times as more staff will be available.

Consultation Question 22:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Nothing further to add

Consultation Question 23:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

The relevant governing authority will be familiar with their staff. This practice follows current procedures. Names of officiants would need to be inserted into a spreadsheet for all officials to view.

Consultation Question 24:

Consultation Question 29:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes. They may need training on legal duties and will General Register Office carry this out? How will the training be monitored and evaluated?

Consultation Question 30:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes as they will know their staff.

Consultation Question 31:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

1. Agreed
2. Training will need to be provided on legal aspect of role.
3. Yes but difficult to implement. There may need to be a separate training group established to monitor and deliver training which could be appointed by GRO. There is already a National Training group in place which could assist.

Consultation Question 32:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes but how will this be monitored? Should each group adopt a code of practice all officiants should adhere to?

Consultation Question 33:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes. They should be able to operate at full cost recovery. Our experience shows that some venues may wish to appoint their own independent celebrants which may affect income for Local Authorities and other independent celebrants. Independent celebrants may wish to publish their fees for ceremonies just as churches and Registration Services do which will enable full and fair competition.

Consultation Question 34:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Agreed . Otherwise no point in having different categories of officiants.

Consultation Question 35:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Solemnity and dignity will need defining to ensure consistency and best practice.

Consultation Question 36:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

GRO do not deliver ceremonies so may be best to include some Local Authorities/ Independent Celebrants to deliver this training with GRO input.

Consultation Question 37:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes but how will this feedback be obtained and acted upon?

Consultation Question 38:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Agreed as we do not wish to bring the profession into disrepute.

Consultation Question 39:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

GRO may wish to delegate this work to the Local Authority.

Consultation Question 40:

No

Please expand on your answer:

To ensure consistency and standards should they re-apply every 10 years?

Consultation Question 41:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Agreed but a decision will need to be taken how often the CPD is required and how this will be monitored.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

1a Agree

1b. Agree as the ceremony begins on a negative note and this existence of impediments will have been checked beforehand. However, it will deprive guests of the opportunity of coughing at that moment just to add to the tension!

2. Agree

3. Agree - but if the couple choose not to express this consent in the ceremony will the officiant need to inform witnesses and guests beforehand? Will the officiant need to ensure that the couple read/recite words that are on the schedule expressing consent?

4 Agree

Consultation Question 43:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Agreed

Consultation Question 44:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Nothing to add

Consultation Question 45:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Reading from Corinthians 13 about Love:- Love is patient, love is kind

To include promises from Book of Common Prayer:- to have and to hold from this day forward, in sickness and in health.....

Consultation Question 46:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Agreed as there will be no need for this.

Consultation Question 47:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Agreed

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Agree as long as Health and Safety requirements are met. This will remove a lot of red tape. Private homes will require an individual risk assessment before we send staff to an unknown location.

outdoors,, on inland waters such as lakes or rivers,, in the air, and/or, in private homes.

Please share your views below:

Outdoors is fine as long as weather is clement. Need a Plan B as well or lots of umbrellas and warm coats.

Consultation Question 49:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Agreed as this causes unnecessary bureaucracy.

Consultation Question 50:

Yes

Yes

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Agreed as we should all respect each other's boundaries.

Consultation Question 51:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes with help of Local Authority Health and Safety if required. Officiant should assess before ceremony with suitable risk assessment.

Consultation Question 52:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Agree but what may compromise safe for one officiant may not be the same for another.

Other

Please expand on your answer:

GRO do not have much experience in the actual delivery of ceremonies and their locations. GRO should delegate this responsibility to Local Authorities who are more familiar with their local areas. GRO to provide some general guidance.

Also some registration officers may feel more comfortable with an area of higher risk than others.

Consultation Question 53:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

A pre-approval process could be considered and would provide some certainty to couples that their ceremony could go ahead.

Please share your views below:

The responsibility will change depending on the choice of celebrant.

A checklist with requirements to be agreed. Not sure whether one size fits all would work for every location. These will evolve as experience is gained. There should be some flexibility as what one officiant may regard as risky another will regard as perfectly acceptable.

Chapter 8: Registration

Consultation Question 54:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

1. Yes but hope most of these details would be already known beforehand and included before signing.
2. Venue might be tricky to describe if in a field or hot air balloon.
3. Agreed

Consultation Question 55:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Agree. Although when a document recorded in Welsh is presented for legal purposes in England it would need to be translated which would involve cost and delay for couple.

Consultation Question 56:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Definitely

Chapter 10: Validity and offences

Consultation Question 57:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

1. Agree as long as there was a schedule to sign at the ceremony

2. Agree.

3. Agree

Consultation Question 58:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Any one of these should suffice to make a non- qualifying ceremony.

Consultation Question 59:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

2. Agree – no longer relevant.

Consultation Question 60:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Agree – no time period required

Consultation Question 61:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

1. Agree but how will this be monitored? Should they show some ID to check against a database?

2. Agree – independent celebrants currently mislead couples into believing they are having a legal ceremony when they are not. If they are allowed to conduct legal ceremonies this will stop.

Chapter 11: Special types of wedding

Consultation Question 62:

Please share your views below:

- Ceremonies where one party has a terminal illness require a lot of resource at very short notice. Currently, there is a small charge to cover consideration of letter by GRO (£15) but no charge for this ceremony but many couples have indicated they would be willing to pay.
- Doctor's letter is crucial to allow this ceremony to take place. Registrars should be able to clear these letters without referring to GRO as this is an additional administrative burden.
- Detained/Housebound– also require a lot of resource and over complicated. They require particular forms to be completed by the governor of the prison or the GP to prove they are housebound/detained with time restrictions on them

Consultation Question 63:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

This could present difficulties for the party who is terminally ill and would require attendance of the Registrar at the hospital/home or hospice to give NOM where now the “well” party can do this on their behalf. Often NOM is given and the ceremony takes place within hours rather than days. Couples seem to leave it to the last minute to decide to marry.

Terminally ill people are often more “conscious” at particular times during the day and this would mean staff having to see them for NOM at this time. Not all terminally patients are able to write and submit their Notice online due to their deteriorating health.

Consultation Question 65:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Agree – could relieve some pressure in Register Office and NOM could be taken earlier when the ill person chose to do this rather than at the last minute.

Consultation Question 66:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Agree as sometimes there can be a delay and 12 months would give everyone more time to organize things and avoid having to give NOM twice

Consultation Question 67:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

1.Yes – great idea.

2.Yes

3.Happy to consider but not sure how this would work in reality with technology. It would have saved so much time and reorganization if we had the facility to do this in current pandemic. We have found that virtual citizenship ceremonies worked well.

4.Yes – to be done electronically with separate copies.

Yes – this would be welcome. Some doctors now will specify someone is at risk of death but this is insufficient for a wedding by RG licence.

Chapter 12: Fees

Consultation Question 75:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes – but cost recovery will be different in parts of the country. How will the national fee be calculated to ensure it will be acceptable in London as well as in other more deprived parts of the country?

Consultation Question 76:

(2) a separate fee from other forms of giving notice, set nationally on compassionate grounds at below cost level.

Please expand on your answer:

1) On compassionate grounds – should be lower.

Consultation Question 77:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Agree - couples should be able to have a civil ceremony at a fee set by regulation but please make fee more realistic and at cost recovery. Suggest some flexibility on where the ceremony can take place and let each Registration Service decide where to hold their ceremony rather than being restricted to a particular room shown on a plan approved by GRO as it is now. This caused real issues in the current pandemic.

Consultation Question 78:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Agree but there may need to be some national guidance so we are all covering the same points.

Consultation Question 79:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

- Agree and advocate this is set by Local Authority who are familiar with venues within their districts. This pre-approval could be shared with independent celebrants and a charge could be considered for this if appropriate.
- Or there could also be a national database under each district which could be accessed by all celebrants to check a venue and the existence of a pre-approval check.

Consultation Question 80:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

- Currently some authorities pay their staff an hourly rate and some a per ceremony fee. The fee would need to take into account the fees being charged by independent celebrants to allow fair competition.
- It is not just travel time but the work involved in preparing the ceremony, collection of paperwork and post ceremony admin. How will this be costed?

Consultation Question 81:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 82:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes fees should be the same. I hope location of ceremony will be more flexible too, particularly in a prison.

Consultation Question 83:

(2) there should be no fee.

Please expand on your answer:

We carry out 12 per year – happy to do these at no cost.

Consultation Question 84:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

As there will be work involved sounds reasonable for the Registrar general to prescribe a fee.

Chapter 13: The potential impact of our proposals

Consultation Question 85:

Please share your views below:

1. Current law only gives couples a choice of religious or civil weddings when most couples want a blended approach. Cost of ceremony can sometimes be prohibitive for couples. We have noticed an increase in the number of civil partnerships taking place probably because couples are looking for something more modern and reflective of their lifestyles rather than the traditional wedding ceremony.

2. It would offer wider choice to couples and could increase number of weddings. Simplifying legal preliminaries may also encourage couples to marry. Feedback from couples is that it is complicated to get married – not all of them have relevant documents and the 7 days residency can cause problems for them.

Consultation Question 86:

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

1. These are popular with couples who are then going on to have their “real” ceremony in a garden afterwards. The current fee does not cover the cost of delivering this ceremony and that is why we only offer 3 ceremonies per week. Couples complain about the lack of availability of these register office slots.

2. These costs vary and we recognise that we use these fees to subsidise the cost of running our offices and offering free birth and death appointments. Venues pay the same licensing fee no matter what their size or income and our fees are also the same whether you marry in a palace or a barn on a Saturday afternoon at 2pm. We feel that the fees we charge are a small proportion of the total cost of the wedding.

3. Our charges generally reflect cost of a full service in Church of England with the choir and bells. Fees for ceremonies in non- conformist churches are generally lower and couples are asked to give a donation for their ceremony. If a Registrar is required to attend the ceremony in a registered place of worship the fee charged does not cover the cost of attendance and training required.

4. These couples have a statutory ceremony and are then charged a fee by the Local Authority to have another ceremony in a garden or field. The fee charged includes a health and safety visit to the proposed venue to ensure it is safe for staff to attend. Same registrar is booked to conduct the ceremony. Couples want guests at the garden ceremony to believe this is a legal ceremony and try to persuade registrars to make it look this way which puts registrars in a difficult position. Really needs reforming and bringing up to date.

5. Most couples will book a statutory ceremony at £46 but it adds to the costs for the couple and removing the requirement would be welcomed and avoid confusion. It is particularly pertinent for couples who have had a ceremony at their home conducted by a religious leader which they believe to be their real ceremony but afterwards are required to book a legal ceremony to have their marriage recognized in law.

1 The proposals could reduce the number of Register Office weddings as outlined in point 1 above if couples could have a legal ceremony outside and anywhere. As only 1 Registrar will be required more of these ceremonies could be offered at a lower cost.

2. This would provide couples with wider choice. Local Authority would lose income from licensing venues but would need to carry out a visit to ensure safety of staff.

3. This will benefit couples who have had a religious ceremony and then are required to have another ceremony to prove they are legally married.

Consultation Question 87:

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it. We would also welcome any data on the size of businesses that are affected by the law or will be impacted under our proposed reforms. :

1. Some newer and smaller venues find it difficult to fund the licence fee although it is quite reasonable when spread over 3 years. We encourage our venues to licence every suitable space to give couples a wider choice when they come to book their ceremony. Partnership working with venues is important and we would not want to lose this important relationship.

2. More staff will be recruited and trained if there are not enough to meet demand. Our staff are paid per ceremony and this is reflected in fees we charge couples which also includes a personal meeting with the Registrar and a bespoke ceremony. Having 1 Registrar attend a ceremony would allow us to double the number of ceremony slots we could offer to couples.

1.A visit would still be required to ensure safety of staff. Venues may welcome a relaxation in the rules but others may feel vulnerable without Local Authority support.

2.Local Authorities may lose registration staff who may set up as independent celebrants if Govt allows them to conduct legal ceremonies.

3.Wider choice for couples to be able to have a ceremony of their choice wherever they wish.

4.More couples may decide to marry if restrictions are lifted. However, no evidence to back this up just anecdotal.

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it. We would also welcome any data on the size of businesses that are affected by the law or will be impacted under our proposed reforms. :

Consultation Question 88:

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

Every Registration Service uses funds from its ceremonies to fund its provision of births and deaths. If this income is reduced or withdrawn funding will need to be sourced by the Local Authority to fund the statutory services or Government will need to provide funding for these services in future.

Wider choice for couples and less bureaucracy for Local Authorities to administer.

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

More staff to cover more ceremonies as only 1 will be required for all civil weddings.

There will be loss of income for Local Authorities if these changes go through. There will also be more admin work for the authority regarding data inputting of all ceremonies. Cost of certificate will not cover the work so Local authorities will be operating at a loss.

Consultation Question 89:

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

1. Couples often choose to marry abroad and say this is often due to high costs of weddings in UK.

2.Many couples living abroad come to UK to marry as regulations are relatively straightforward compared to other European countries. Couples from France and Germany in particular take this view.

Couples living abroad also return to marry with family present at ceremony. Students living abroad often choose to marry in the university city they studied in and 7 day residency rule can be difficult and costly for them.

Consultation Question 91:

Please share your views below:

- 1.Ceremony income brings in over 50% of our budget. Any reduction in ceremony income will create a financial burden to the Local Authority which has not existed previously.
- 2.More businesses may decide to offer ceremonies which will contribute to healthy competition but may mean some businesses will run into difficulty.
- 3.No comment
4. If independent officiants can conduct legal weddings at least they will no longer mislead couples about what they can offer. They may have an upper hand in their advertising campaigns compared to staff in Local Authorities who may be squeezed out.
- 5.Couples will have a wider range of choices which will be welcomed. The garden options will be particularly attractive. They will also be looking for some security around their ceremony and Local Authorities, registration officers and celebrants will need to ensure this is provided.

Many churches who do not have an authorised person owing to their size, then a couple would have a meaningful ceremony by having a civil registrar in attendance. If not, such couples would need a civil ceremony as well, separate from their church wedding. Many of these churches will not be able to conduct weddings unless they appoint an authorised person under these proposals.

Consultation Question 26:

Please share your views below:

No it should not. The phrase 'public policy or morality' is rather vague and subjective, and could be used to penalise moral views that are at odds with the prevailing opinion at the time, but are perfectly legal. It would be better to have more objective criteria such as illegal activity or undermining the rule of law.

Please expand on your answer:

At present wedding officials are either trained registrars (as I am) or religious representatives who are likely to hold strong views on the importance of marriage. 'Independent' people would not necessarily place such a value on marriage. Independent officials who conduct currently non legally binding weddings in rather strange places, often undermine the dignity of marriage. There are many examples of this where people cannot be thinking seriously about what they are doing.

Opening up the market for independent officials turns wedding vows into a commercial concern, hence driving up the cost of weddings, not reducing the cost which is one of the Government's stated aims. There does not seem to be any safeguards or training in place for this.

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Removing the prescribed words makes the ceremony as meaningless as the couple or officiant chooses. One would hope that the commitment in marriage should be taken seriously, with sincere promises made, otherwise it simply becomes a private matter.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Non-legal ceremonies can already be personalised and many are trivial and inappropriate, damaging the dignity of the wedding ceremony. Personalizing legal weddings removes the need for the ceremony to reflect the seriousness of the commitment the parties are making.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Though there would be some advantages of changing the system, there must be clearer safeguards on what would be unsuitable venues. The statement that venues would need to be dignified and safe lacks clarity. Not objecting to weddings 'in the air' as a venue could hardly be described as 'safe' so these terms could be interpreted rather broadly.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The status quo of oral consent to marriage and no impediment should continue, otherwise there is a real risk that the public declarations always considered foundational to the legal marriage ceremony will be seriously undermined, as will the commitment being made. If this proposal is accepted, in theory it would be possible for someone to get married without even being physically present at the 'ceremony'. It is not very much to ask that some specific phrases are used to show that both people freely consent to the lifetime commitment they are entering into. There is already a large amount of flexibility in the wedding ceremony; the prescribed words are minimal and couples can add to them as they wish. A wedding is not just about the couple. Two people enter into a union which has been legally defined and is understood by society. So society and the law have an interest in the making of a public declaration to marry: this is because marriage is far more than a private arrangement and just a matter between two people.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This is the conclusion from my response to Question 42. I reiterate the marriage ceremony should be a seriousness and solemn event. A particular ceremony should not just be allowed because the couple wants it, but because it is appropriate for such a significant event. The notion that a couple should be able to choose everything about a wedding ceremony comes from a wrong view of marriage because a wedding is a public declaration in which society at large and the state have an interest.

Consultation Question 46:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Flexibility should remain.

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The "open doors" requirement helps convey the public nature of the wedding declarations. In fact, the open doors requirement was introduced hundreds of years ago as a protection against forced marriages. Although this is greatly diminished today it is still a problem in our society. As mentioned in my response to Question 42, removing this requirement encourages a false perception that marriage is a private matter without any public significance.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

I reiterate: a marriage ceremony should be a serious and solemn event. Venues should not simply be allowed because marrying couples want them, but because they are appropriate places to hold such a significant ceremony.

While there are some specific benefits to having a wider variety of venues I caution against legitimising inappropriate settings. The practice of licensing premises should continue.

outdoors,, on inland waters such as lakes or rivers,, in the air, and/or, in private homes.

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

If allowed, this will blur the distinction between belief and non-belief.

Consultation Question 51:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The location needs to be formally approved by society at large, not by an individual; therefore, by some form of licensing as at present.

Consultation Question 52:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Answer as per the above. There is, in any case, a complete lack of clarity in how venues will be tested for “dignity” and “safety”. While the proposals call for guidance from the General Register Office, the terms are not defined and stringent safeguards should be proposed.

Chapter 13: The potential impact of our proposals

Consultation Question 85:

Please share your views below:

My own opinion is that any change in getting married is likely to have only for good or not. The reason for this is that my opinion the main reason - whether articulated or not - is that our present society is generally one of less or non-commitment, especially in the matter of personal relationships. If the commitment element in weddings is loosened to facilitate this, however, then marriage is being undermined and the families concerned will ultimately be less stable.

Consultation Question 86:

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

The fact is that at the moment one of the reasons for not marrying is the total cost involved of getting married, for which the fees (£100s for church / religious venue, registry office and legal costs) are just a small fraction. The overwhelming proportion of the money involved is for the social aspect, namely, pre-wedding parties, a special (expensive) licensed wedding venue and wedding reception which can run into £1,000s or even £10,000s.

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

As has been previously stated there is already greatly reduced costs available through not having the expense of the social side of getting married. So the proposals, apart from, possibly, allowing 'home' weddings, is likely to have minimal impact.

Chapter 4: Preliminaries

Consultation Question 4:

No

Please expand on your answer:

To be registered in an English or Welsh registration district is viewed as necessary to prevent people arriving from abroad, and becoming married without due consideration of their terms and conditions.

Consultation Question 5:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

The notice period is necessary, in order to personally identify the individuals who are about to be involved in this ceremony.

Consultation Question 6:

another period of time.

Please expand on your answer:

It would be inappropriate for individuals to enter England Wales or Scotland in order to become married at a short notice. These in-person interviews are an important part of the legal processes which should proceed in due time.

Consultation Question 7:

Please share your views below:

It is difficult to identify persons who need to be interviewed remotely, but it is better than no interview occurring at all. There is a danger or a concern about sham for forced marriages, and the capacity of either party to consent to such an event. It is important that appropriate language is used at these events, so that the ability of the individuals to speak and have capacity to consent are also assessed appropriately. The fact that an interview has taken place, does not necessarily mean that the adjudicator agrees with the proposed wedding, and therefore it should be possible for the event to be cancelled, or inspected further, should suspicions arise.

Chapter 5: Officiants

Consultation Question 19:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

It is important that participants in a marriage ceremony fully recognise the full importance of the steps which are about to be undertaken.

Consultation Question 20:

No

Please expand on your answer:

A registration officer should be able to attend small churches when that is necessary.

Many churches continue to rely on civil registrars to register weddings as they do not have an official authorised for that congregation or meeting place.

This proposal may pose a danger of some churches falling foul of wedding law if marriages at those places occur only occasionally, or there are unfamiliar regulations which need to be upheld.

Consultation Question 21:

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 22:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

But only with appropriate training, and review of that training periodically.

Consultation Question 23:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Any officiant should be recognised by a national body in order that they are verified on some sort of national register which is publicly obtainable or observed. This register should be reviewed regularly at least annually.

Consultation Question 24:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Please share your views below:

Consultation Question 25:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 26:

Please share your views below:

This proposal sounds reasonable but there is a risk that it could become a mechanism for penalising views that contradict prevailing public opinion. Popular culture can be at odds with faithful Bible teaching on marriage sexual ethics and personal identities.

Consultation Question 27:

Please share your views below:

No, since that officer may not be up-to-date with appropriate training in that sphere of work.

Consultation Question 28:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

It is also important to keep a live register of those officiants.

Consultation Question 29:

No

Please expand on your answer:

These independent officiant may have various views on the importance of marriage, which would open the doors up to many varied views towards the process of being an officiant. Some of the ceremonies held by certain "celebrants" have held weddings that are not legally binding, in surroundings which are not appropriate to the solemnity of a lifelong marriage. Such places have been in swimming pools, in dungeons, and dressed as cartoon characters on Halloween. Such ceremonies might have become legally binding if independent officiants were allowed to be present in order to solemnise such an event. Some of these officiants may be pseudo-religious people where ceremonies might mis-represent the beliefs of the group of people overall. If these officiants are to be paid then that would set a precedent which encourages a financially competitive edge to ceremonies where this ought not to occur. Safeguards for the training of these officiants has not been laid out, therefore the beliefs of such individuals are open to question at such potentially serious ceremonies.

Consultation Question 30:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

The terms “fit” and “proper” need to be operationally defined so that these terms are precise in meaning, and that the people involved fit the criteria which have been designated.

Consultation Question 31:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Not necessary.

Consultation Question 32:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes, this fits my earlier comments.

Consultation Question 33:

No

Please expand on your answer:

There should be national limits set for fees, so that they are neither too cheap, nor too expensive. If the fees are too cheap, this would exemplify cheapness of the event, being too expensive might make the ceremony too prohibitive for those on low incomes.

As long as the timescale between these events of requesting withdrawal of authorisation happens within a set time period of perhaps a month or two so that those who are required to withdraw do so within a prescribed time period.

Consultation Question 38:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

This arrangement would provide appropriate oversight.

Consultation Question 39:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes, this would add to appropriate oversight.

Consultation Question 40:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

There should be no upper age limit, however it ought to be necessary to retrain individuals at appropriate intervals my suggestion is every five years.

Consultation Question 41:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Most professional bodies have a retraining period which is appropriate to the profession, and this agrees with my former comment that a five year retraining, or refresher, would be appropriate. A register of this retraining should be held at national level. This register should be accessible to the public.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

It is appropriate that prescribed words remain part of the ceremony in order to prevent a degeneration of the ceremony itself into a meaningless event. The promises between the parties should be founded on a sound understanding of the solemnity of these marriage ceremonies. These prescribed words need only be a small part of a wedding ceremony, however they are crucial in order to appropriately standardise the event across national boundaries, religions, and personal or corporate beliefs systems.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

It is highly important that a wedding ceremony fulfils legal requirements, around which personal preferences may be shaped. Each wedding is capable of being personalised after legal requirements have been met. The seriousness of each commitment at a wedding ceremony should be emphasised rather than making the event too subjective, even outlandish. The various Faith systems of the people involved would hopefully ring fence the components of the ceremony with an element of protection, dignity, and solemnity of the marriage event.

Consultation Question 44:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Some faith and belief systems have recently become secularised in recent years so it is important across faiths to maintain high standards of proceedings and legislature of the ceremonies themselves.

Consultation Question 45:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

It is difficult to understand what "religious content" means in a secular context. If those participating in the ceremony believe in God, then prayer might be possible. However if the belief system in a secular context has no such belief, then how might prayer be possible? The ceremony is not only a public event, but also one which is performed before God, in appropriate religious contexts.

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

It is important to maintain the “open door” policy to emphasise that marriage is not only a personal event, but also important to society as a whole. The fact that the public are allowed to be present at such ceremonies provides an element of protecting against forced marriages, and bigamy for example.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

There are advantages and disadvantages in altering current arrangements. An advantage is that some small churches use shared buildings such as community centres or schools for their meetings. Currently weddings cannot be held in those venues. However there is a risk that safeguards need to be put in place so that inappropriate venues may not be used for wedding ceremonies, and it is not currently known how such venues might be appropriately selected, or provided. The terminology used is that such venues should be “dignified and safe “ but currently lacks specification on how this will be tested or applied to any venue which might be used for a wedding ceremony. These terms “dignified and safe “need to be further operationally defined in order that inappropriate venues are not selected for wedding ceremonies to take place. The public have been known for unofficial weddings to choose places such as dungeons, comic book conventions, a ruined leper hospital, and swimming pools. Such settings clearly trivialise marriage. The law must not allow such venues to have legally binding ceremonies in these places.

on inland waters such as lakes or rivers,, in the air, and/or, in private homes.

Please share your views below:

Any wedding ceremony should be held in a stable environment where those involved would be able to focus on the ceremony and its importance. The public should also be allowed to attend when they desire to do so. There are currently legal restraints on the number of respondents due to the Covid epidemic, however in general the number permitted to attend should be reasonable according to the law set at that time.

The risk with inland waters such as lakes or rivers is that they may be susceptible to flooding, and other weather variables which would put the respondents at risk. There have been cases where riverboats used for such ceremonies have capsized due to errant provision of safety measures being employed.

The risk with ceremonies held in the air is that the machines which are capable of flight may not hold sufficient capacity for all those who desire to be involved to be capable of being present. Such aircraft should be fully certified, and the pilots and assistants should not be distracted by the ceremony.

The risk with holding such ceremonies in private homes, is that the public may not be allowed into such venues as they ought to be.

The solemnity of the wedding ceremony should always be upheld to the highest standards, and should be considered to be a life long agreement between those involved in the ceremony. The venues in which marriage ceremonies are held should lean towards such solemnity and not away from it.

Consultation Question 49:

No

Please expand on your answer:

As I have said before, the public availability at such events is important to emphasise that marriage is a social benefit to the whole community, and not just to those involved in the ceremony itself. As I have said before, the public availability at such events is important to emphasise that marriage is a social benefit to the whole community, and not adjust to those involved in the ceremony itself.

Consultation Question 50:

Yes

Other

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

There are sufficient venues at present for non-religious weddings to occur where that is desired. There should not be a reason for non-religious belief organisations to take over religious venues in order for a wedding to occur. The whole point of using a religious venue would be to recognise that the ceremony is not performed merely before people, but also in the sight of God. The legality of such ceremonies should be duly monitored as my previous comments suggest.

Consultation Question 51:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This should only occur with sufficient legal oversight of the venue, its participants, and those otherwise involved in the preparation of the premises. It is important that the premises used are not supplied ad hoc, but for use on a regular basis as a certified and publicly recognised venue for such ceremonies to occur.

Consultation Question 52:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

The terms 'safe', and 'dignified' should both be operationally defined. There are many reasons why one or the other of these terms might be used in order to prevent the ceremony going ahead.

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Please see my former comment.

Consultation Question 53:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

This helps to ensure conformity across local and National boundaries.

Please share your views below:

Those in charge of each venue should be held accountable for ensuring that the venue conforms to national standards, similar to the powers held by the Health and Safety Executive of the U.K. Inspectors should be able to inspect premises without prior notice, and have powers to rescind permission from the use of venues if the officiants do not comply with improvement notices within a reasonable time.

This would also mean that the inspection officers would need to be able to access a national database of the names and addresses of those premises, and that appeals might be made to an Ombudsman who has a final say for decisions in favour or against certain premises being used in the future. Evidence should be weighed accordingly, and it should be possible for local teams of inspectors to refer cases upwards to more senior members, as occurs in many National Organisations.

Chapter 8: Registration

Consultation Question 54:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Part 3 should include "parent or legal guardian". A suitable respondent list should be available at each venue.

Consultation Question 55:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

I hold no firm views on this matter.

Consultation Question 56:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

This would make the public aware of the legality of the ceremony, from records which are publicly available. The fees for such enquiries should be reasonable.

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

3. & 4. should state 'the knowledge of one or both parties'.

I do not agree that same-sex marriages are permissible on any account, as they breach higher laws.

Other

Please expand on your answer:

1. Mistakes can be corrected and initialled, if the full name of those initials are available on the document.

2. The officiant might in exceptional circumstances also be a witness.

3. There should not be any excuse for not signing the schedule. If the officiants or parties involved collapse, or are incapacitated part-way through the ceremony, it should be able to be re-run at an appropriate time and venue.

Chapter 13: The potential impact of our proposals

Consultation Question 85:

Please share your views below:

The current law is restrictive in that premises have to be licenced for a legal marriage to take place. Celebrants should be able to train and be registered as an officiant although there should be a regulation to ensure that Celebrants are trained to a high level and conduct themselves in the same manner as registrars. There should be a central record for marriage registration and extensive training, with some qualification given.

It should be possible for couples marrying in this country to have the same freedoms as those marrying in the USA or Australia for instance. Although as with these countries the legal paperwork should be undertaken by town hall registrars - the way that City Hall does for the USA.

Consultation Question 86:

Couples who wish to get married where how and when they wish conduct a simple ceremony in a registry office for the legal paperwork and then have a wedding ceremony which reflects their personality. Wish for the personalised wedding ceremony to have legal significance.

The church where the wedding is to take place may not be attended by either bride or groom. If banns are to be read, they must include the churches where the bride and the groom worship.

Consultation Question 16:

Please share your views below:

The church should be the body to decide the requirements for clergy when a church wedding is requested. It is canon law, not civil law.

Consultation Question 17:

Please share your views below:

Yes, both the aspiring bride and aspiring groom should make a statement that there is no known impediment.

Consultation Question 18:

Anglican preliminaries should continue to be recognised as legal preliminaries to weddings officiated by the Church of England and the Church in Wales; or

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Marriage is serious and the foundation of society. Both bride and groom should give verbal assent to the marriage during the ceremony. Other things may be added to personalise the ceremony, but the basics must remain. Anything less would allow a person to be married without their consent or even their presence, which could lead to abuse of the system.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The form and ceremony must be retained in order to preserve the solemnity and seriousness of what is taking place. The ceremony is not just for the couple. The whole of society has a stake in marriage. It is the 'gold standard'. The seriousness of a promise to be kept 'as long as we are both alive' must be retained.

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The legal requirement for public access to wedding venues was introduced centuries ago to try to prevent forced marriages. Since forced marriages are on the rise in this country, particularly among immigrant communities, this safeguard should be retained for the sake of the young women involved.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The location of a wedding ceremony has a huge implication on the perceived solemnity and dignity of the occasion. The time for a party is afterwards, not during the ceremony.

outdoors,, on inland waters such as lakes or rivers,, in the air, and/or, in private homes.

Please share your views below:

No to each. Marriage is serious and solemn. It is the most important legal contract anybody enters into in their life. The surroundings should be in keeping with that importance.

These are issues which should be decided by the leaders of the religious (or non-religious) organisations.

Consultation Question 51:

No

Please expand on your answer:

That would be too vague. An officiant might decide to authorise a wedding at a location which detracted from the seriousness of the occasion. Firm guidelines are needed.

Consultation Question 52:

No

Please expand on your answer:

'Dignified' is too loose a term. It is too open to interpretation. Law must use specific language to determine what locations are permissible and dignified.

It also needs to go further than this.

How do we define dignity and solemnity in our society?

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

One cannot be able to get married without being present at the wedding ceremony. Simply signing the marriage schedule is inadequate.

This also seems to be a major departure from the public declarations always considered foundational to the legal marriage ceremony. This risks undermining the solemnity of the wedding ceremony and denying the seriousness of the commitment being made.

The idea that a couple should be able to completely personalise their ceremony comes from a wrong view of marriage. A wedding is not just about the couple. The couple enter into a union which is understood by society and has been legally defined.

So society and the law have an interest in the making of a public declaration. The logic of a wholly self-defined marriage ceremony is for marriage to be decoupled from the law and wider society.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This does not reflect the seriousness and solemnity of a marriage ceremony.

A particular ceremony should not just be allowed because the couple wants it, but because it is appropriate for such a significant event.

The idea that a couple should be able to choose everything about a wedding ceremony comes from a wrong view of marriage. A wedding is a public declaration in which society and the state have an interest.

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The "open doors" requirement helps convey the public nature of wedding declarations.

This was introduced hundreds of years ago as a protection against forced marriage. This is still a problem in our society.

Removing the requirement encourages a false perception that marriage is a private matter without any public significance.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Again this undermines the seriousness and solemnity of a marriage ceremony. Venues should not simply be allowed because marrying couples want them, but because they are appropriate places to hold such a significant ceremony.

Dignity and solemnity are very formal-sounding terms, which many people may think unnecessary. But dignity and solemnity do not mean the exclusion of joy and celebration, or an element of informality. Quite the contrary! The focus is on the essential meaning and significance of an enduring marriage relationship, which is to provide a secure, loving environment in which a couple can grow and mature and develop their identities, and in which children can experience a safe place as they, too, grow and develop. The marriage relationship is a serious matter, a fundamental building block of a compassionate society, requiring recognition and respect. Dignity and solemnity are entirely appropriate as a man and woman set out on their voyage together. Alongside sits the need for the content and tone of the marriage ceremony, and this responsibility must be placed upon officiants. Furthermore, dignity and solemnity require settings that are compatible with and support the wider aims of a marriage ceremony. Settings, content and tone - the importance of these should not be under-estimated.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This creates a very loose approach to the ceremony, and for what purpose? Of course, the current declaration can be modified up-dated, but it forms only a very small part of a whole ceremony. Marriage is not simply a personal matter; it is also a public event, a universally recognised relationship. Moreover, it is a legally defined institution, so surely it is right that the central wording and statement of commitment should be one that all marriage ceremonies include. There is something important to be said for having a common declaration which applies to every marriage ceremony. For couples to be able to say virtually anything they want carries a real danger of trivialising and downgrading an event which is, arguably, the most important step any couple can take. Furthermore, the couple are at liberty to negotiate with the officiant the inclusion of additional words of their own choice.

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Why should people be prevented from attending a ceremony? It only serves to privatise what is essentially a public event. It is not just a marriage between two people, otherwise why would the state be involved at all, and why would we waste time and resources enacting laws surrounding marriage? Neither should it be forgotten that forced marriages remain a problem in the UK, which closed doors would only exacerbate.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

While there may be good intentions behind this proposal, there is little doubt that there are likely to be many occasions when the choices are trivial, inappropriate, and entirely out of keeping with the dignity and solemnity integral to a marriage ceremony. Why on earth would the state add its support to such a development. Marriage ceremonies are not about stunts, nor should they be reduced to a search for the next crowd-pulling venue. Can the state not, at least, lend its support to providing an environment and ambience that is in keeping with the seriousness of what a couple are agreeing to do?

Please share your views below:

Again, a marriage is a public event, so any venues that rule out participation and attendance, and which effectively privatise the ceremony, are inappropriate.

Chapter 13: The potential impact of our proposals

Consultation Question 85:

Please share your views below:

I do not believe that regulations in and of themselves act as a deterrent, nor do I think that a free-and-easy, laissez-faire approach does anything to encourage a couple to work through the main issues involved in marriage, and to prepare themselves for what may lie ahead. A focus on what might be called the "external" issues omits the far more important matter of helping couples fix their primary attention on the "internal" factors that will support them in building a long-term relationship which will be of benefit not only to themselves but to society in general.

Consultation Question 86:

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

Increasing commercialism and all the associated pitfalls affect not only marriage ceremonies but so many other aspects of contemporary life. It is the expectations of society, alongside the various pressures, that can have a negative impact, and undermine the prime purposes of marriage which, in essence, are not about the form and nature of the ceremony but about lifelong, eternal values and objectives.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

1) agree.

2,3) & 4) There should be no flexibility as to the words to be used by the participating couples. The wording should be laid down in law to define what the contract and purpose of marriage is, and couples must both be present at a proper ceremony and required to repeat them in front of witnesses and should not be free to say as much or as little as they choose. The emphasis must be to ensure that the life-long intention and seriousness of the marriage is stated and accepted by the participants from the outset., this to be reinforced by the dignity and appropriateness of the surroundings.

The importance of witnesses being present, and there being a prescribed form of marriage laid down in Law is to reinforce the fact that this is a public legal contract, recognised by society at large, and not just a private arrangement between a couple for their own purposes.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The form and ceremony of a marriage should be dictated by the importance of reinforcing the fact that a marriage is a matter of significance to society and the State, and not just a matter of choice and convenience of the couple. Nothing should be allowed to take place during the actual ceremony which detracts from the seriousness of the contract being entered into, Light heartedness should be confined to any celebratory party after the ceremony, when it should be welcomed in a note of celebration and joyfulness..

Consultation Question 44:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Whilst there need be no universal rules about the broad form of a wedding ceremony, it must contain the words of the marriage contract as defined in Law, to be repeated at the time by the couple before witnesses and may be subject to any special requirements of the relevant faith body. There need not be any legal limitations on who can have one of the weddings mentioned, though each denomination should be allowed to set its own rules.

Consultation Question 45:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

I believe this would be broadly welcomed.

Please share your views below:

At civil weddings I believe specific examples of religious content, ie hymns, prayers, blessings etc., should be decided by the couple according to their individual preference, but should always be in a form serious enough not to invite ridicule. There should be no "spoof" religious content.

Consultation Question 46:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

It is important for a marriage to be seen as a matter of public interest, and there should be an opportunity and a right for any one of the public to object, albeit not facetiously. Locked doors might provide an opportunity for a forced marriage to take place "under wraps". Marriage should always be seen as more than a private arrangement between a couple or their families.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Definitely disagree. Weddings should always take place in a place, indoors or out of doors, licensed for weddings. The seriousness of the commitment being undertaken must be emphasised by the dignity of the environment, and such licensing should be refused if that requirement is not met.

outdoors,

Please share your views below:

Outdoors in a properly licensed environment as in previous answer may be permitted, but none of the other venues listed. The only exception might be private homes where there is a limiting health consideration, but this would require proper authorisation.

Consultation Question 49:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The public must always have the right to attend, as a marriage is not just a private arrangement between a couple, but a matter of significance to society and the State. There must be no opportunity for forced marriages to take place behind closed doors.

Consultation Question 50:

Yes

Yes

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

The difference between civil and religious ceremonies must be maintained where location is concerned,. But content should be allowed to be flexible, subject to the Law prescribing the precise wording of the marriage contract.

Consultation Question 51:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The appropriateness of the location should be subject to approval by the General Register Office.

Consultation Question 52:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes, but always within the approval of the General Register Office. Weddings should never be permitted in random locations purely at the whim of the couple.

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes, but within strict parameters. No facetious, quirky or unconventional locations. The importance must always be to maintain the dignity and solemnity of the occasion.

Consultation Question 53:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Type of locations must be strictly defined and not subject to arbitrary choice.

Consultation Question 57:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

1) Genuine mistakes can always be corrected and should not in themselves invalidate a marriage.

2) Witnesses must always be present.

3) This should invalidate a marriage.

Consultation Question 58:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 59:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

But lack of consummation, rather than not cohabiting, should always be capable of being a reason to invalidate the marriage.

No

Consultation Question 68:

No

Please expand on your answer:

No - always on dry land in legally approved locations. The only exception might be for two serving Royal Naval personnel on board one of Her Majesty's ships on a long assignment, where the Captain or Chaplain could officiate. Documentation might have to be remote in those circumstances.

Consultation Question 69:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Except for Naval personnel, see above.

Consultation Question 70:

Please share your views below:

Weddings should always be held on dry land in the country of jurisdiction in or on premises properly approved by the General Register Office. Exception might be for serving Naval personnel - see above.

Consultation Question 71:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Marriages on ships of any description should not be permitted, apart from the case of Naval personnel on board their ship - see above, when the Captain or Chaplain should officiate.

Consultation Question 72:

No

Please expand on your answer:

No, as above, except for serving Royal Navy personnel on board their ship as above.

Yes

Chapter 13: The potential impact of our proposals

Consultation Question 85:

Please share your views below:

1) The current Law does not seem to affect those who wish to get married.

2) I don't believe the current Law needs to be changed in principle.

Consultation Question 86:

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

Whatever the impact might be, the current Law should not be changed. The importance is to maintain the dignity, solemnity and seriousness of the marriage contract., and that it should not be made easier purely to facilitate marriages that are not intended to be permanent.

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

Nothing should be done to discourage the intended permanence of marriage , or to play down the solemnity and seriousness of the marriage contract.. It is an established fact that children thrive best in a happy and permanent marriage. Any perceived cost and inconvenience that present arrangements involve should not be an excuse for making it easier to go into and out of marriage.

Consultation Question 87:

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it. We would also welcome any data on the size of businesses that are affected by the law or will be impacted under our proposed reforms. :

Please see reply to previous question.

Consultation Question 89:

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

However inconvenient, the Law and resulting procedures should not be changed.

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

The Law should not be chaged.

Whilst the current Law should not change, some additional provision might be made for the marriage at sea of serving personnel of the Royal Navy to be married at sea on their own vessel.

Please expand on your answer:

Wedding officiants are currently either highly trained registrars or religious representatives who would have strongly-held beliefs regarding marriage. Independent officiants could open the door to those who may not value marriage as highly. There have been a number of cases where ceremonies have been held in exceedingly unsuitable conditions and places. Such ceremonies could be legally binding if independent officiants were allowed and the dignity of marriage would be undermined. A recent study found that most independent celebrants would give couples very little restriction in what they could include in their ceremony. This sets a very low standard regarding the seriousness of a wedding.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Without the prescribed words the wedding ceremony could be as meaningless as a couple chooses, and legal marriage could become nothing more than a certificate from the Government.

Marriage is founded on solemn promises made between two parties. Under these proposals it would be possible to have a legally recognised wedding in which no words were said between the couple, and no promises made.

The commitment made in marriage must be taken very seriously, and without the prescribed words it is much easier to treat the ceremony casually.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The possibility of self-styled wedding ceremonies will encourage commercialisation. Those more willing to be flexible with the ceremony would be likely to profit the most, encouraging people to push the boundaries.

It is far more important that a legal wedding ceremony should reflect the gravity of the commitment the parties are making than that it is personalised to the couple.

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Marriage is not a private affair. It should be seen in its importance to society.

Ensuring that weddings are open to any member of the public, rather than just those invited, is a way of protecting against instances of bigamy and forced marriage.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Some churches do not own their own premises but worship in shared buildings like community centres and here a change in the law would be useful. However it could be all too easy to use inappropriate and unsuitable or even unsafe venues. Nowhere that could trivialise a marriage should be considered.

Yes, but the officiant should also have a responsibility to uphold the dignity and solemnity of the marriage by ensuring the tone and content is appropriate.

Also, the proposals need to define what is meant by the terms 'solemnity' and 'dignity' as the consultation seems to think marriage ceremonies in the air are suitable which suggests that many proposals for a ceremony would be suitable.

The CPD must be provided by the government and include the public nature of marriage and its importance both on a personal level and on a societal level.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

It should not be possible for someone to get married without being at their own wedding.

There should be a prescribed contract with some set words. This is the foundation of our marriage contract. The above proposals allow the couple potentially to say nothing at all.

There should be some minimum phrases which are agreed by both people underlining its importance in our society and to their lives.

This risks undermining the solemnity of the occasion and the seriousness of the marriage vows.

Marriage is not a private event but a public one and so it is not for a couple to consider their own wording but for society to provide the basic constructs of what that must entail.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This would undermine the seriousness of the event. The format for the ceremony should be dependent on whether it is fitting for such a ceremony and not merely because the couple prefers that particular style.

The public have an interest in that marriage and therefore it is fitting that society provide the framework. For a couple to choose their own marriage ceremony without any constraints is the wrong viewpoint.

Unofficial wedding ceremonies have included James Bond, Lord of the Rings and 'fairy' themes. It is doubtful that these people have recognised the seriousness of the commitment.

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Access to the general public is a reflection of the public nature of marriage and hence members of the public should be able to go to the ceremonies. Allowing a ceremony to be conducted in private creates a false impression of the public nature of marriage. Public marriage (and public access) also provides protection against false or sham marriages which is still a problem in our society.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Marriage is a solemn and dignified occasion. Allowing ceremonies to potentially take place anywhere undermines this dignity. There may be occasions when churches do not have suitable facilities and certain approved (by government) buildings may be good alternatives. However, there have been unapproved wedding ceremonies in underwater facilities, in an S & M dungeon and at a Comic Book convention. These locations do not provide dignity and solemnity to this serious occasion.

Please share your views below:

Having a wedding ceremony in the air does not seem safe and dignified. If this is approved then it appears that the anything goes motto would prevail.

Much to open to fraud , duress and other unlawful pressures. Only in person interviews are safe. Since almost all sham/forced marriages stem from muslim sources such a distinction will lead to allegations (wrong but toxic) that this provision is in fact unintentionally racist and so discriminatory. Every couple should be interviewed in person

Consultation Question 12:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Easily open to abuse and last minute "sudden illness/ unavoidable delay". Those who would like to eg. conduct a forced marriage will use this as a loophole to last minute substitution of undesirable officiant.

Please share your views below:

Substitutes should be closely scrutinised.

Consultation Question 13:

Consultation Question 24:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Impossible to be too prescriptive and this is a sensible definition avoiding the lunatic fringe.

Please share your views below:

There should be a system for registering appropriate organisations after application by them ( cf the charity commissioners who scrutinise organisations to see if they are compliant with charitable objects etc before registration). No other list is required except, administratively, to help potential organisations to avoid wasting their own time.

Consultation Question 25:

Yes such organisations should in principle be excluded but the devil will be in the detail . eg is an organisation which objects to same sex marriage "unlawful" (like most churches) ? And how on earth, nowadays, do you define "morality"??

Consultation Question 27:

Please share your views below:

Because of the risk of abuse and in the interest of simplicity, only individuals not officers should be capable of nomination per se. The fact that an individual is the officer of an organisation should be a factor in acceptance for the role of officiant.

Very sensible and simplifying

Consultation Question 29:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Suitably inclusive and simple.

Consultation Question 30:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

A sensible preliminary to registration but registration should be a careful process as it is key to the ordered expansion of the categories of people who are capable to perform the weddings

Consultation Question 31:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Excellent monitoring in theory but cumbersome and expensive so far as continuing professional development is concerned and not necessary for eg vicars etc.

Consultation Question 32:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Avoids conflicts of interest and so undermining their vital scrutineering role.

Consultation Question 33:

No

Please expand on your answer:

There should be a simple and low rate for the actual wedding performance regardless. However this will not stop abuse as money will be paid illegally to ensure cooperation in the dodgy cases, Unavoidable in practise.

Consultation Question 34:

No

Please expand on your answer:

We do not understand the objection in principle to double nomination.

Chapter 13: The potential impact of our proposals

Consultation Question 85:

Please share your views below:

We have research which indicates that the cost of weddings is, inter alia, a deterrent to marriage and that this affects the less well off far more than the better off. There is an increasing gap between the better off who marry, as they always have, and the less well off who increasingly don't. This is highly undesirable as marriage leads to far greater family stability which is in the national interest and the profound interest of children's development. Please see all our research on this whole area available at www.marriagefoundation.org.uk. The current law contributes to this myth.

We are strongly in favour of your excellent and thoughtful proposed reforms (subject to the small points set out in the survey) because we believe they will promote a resurgence of interest and so participation in marriage which is very good for society. They will also encourage and promote inexpensive weddings. The current laws are wholly out of date and enacted in a different cultural context. They promote the image that marriage is expensive, only for the rich, outmoded and unnecessary "for us". We believe your reforms provide an opportunity to change the image by bringing weddings into the modern era and so make marriage a much more attractive social arrangement available at low cost to all.

Consultation Question 86:

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

see above as to the deterrent effects of the current laws. Going forward we are not convinced about the need for premises to be approved and welcome the possibility of couples getting married where they want providing the officiant is agreeable to the plans and properly approved and registered.

We have covered the impact of cost as a deterrent and everything should be done to remove this barrier. Approving premises will drive up costs.

The retention of register office weddings is consistent with the civil partnerships scheme and should be retained as a well understood and experienced system for those who want simplicity and low cost.

See above. Greater competition in the weddings industry will drive down costs. The introduction of continuing professional development for registered officiants will be cost generating but not at a level which is unrecoverable from individual participants in the process. Reasonable fees at appropriate points will defray costs.

Chapter 1: Introduction

Consultation Question 1:

Please expand on your answer:

My husband and I were married by a Humanist celebrant in England where Humanist weddings are not legally recognised. We additionally had to have a civil marriage so as to become legally wed. Now as a Humanist celebrant myself I conduct weddings in England, again which are not legally recognised.

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

As a celebrant I am explicit with couples that a Humanist wedding is not legally recognised in England and Wales.

No

Please expand on your answer:

In my experience the vast majority of couples who have a Humanist wedding, also make their union legal by additionally having a civil marriage. People choose to have humanist weddings because they identify with the beliefs of their celebrant and they want their ceremony to represent those beliefs.

Unfortunately some couples who would like to have a humanist ceremony cannot because they can only afford the expense of one ceremony, and they have to prioritise the civil wedding as this is legally recognised. This has happened with at least one of the couples I have been supporting.

Personally my husband and I didn't want to have a civil marriage, we considered our humanist ceremony to be our real wedding as it reflected our values. However we did want our marriage to be legally recognised, so we didn't have a choice but to have a register office wedding too.

Consultation Question 24:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The definition put forward does not state that the principle purpose of the organisation must be to advance its belief system. This means that commercial organisations will exploit the definition and will operate with a principle purpose of providing legally recognised marriages. This would undermine the state provision of civil marriages AND any genuine belief-based organisation providing new legal marriages.

The definition for religion/non-religious worldview should be more clearly set out, ie the beliefs of the organisation should have a certain level of seriousness, cohesion and importance, be worthy of respect in a democratic society, be compatible with human dignity and not conflict with the fundamental rights of others.

"Secular" is far too subjective a term to include without significant confusion.

The definition should rely on human rights case law as it related to non-religious beliefs, eg refer to Article 9 of the European Convention on Human Rights. This would bring marriage law in line with human rights law. It would limit the organisations authorised to conduct marriages to only those with intrinsically linked beliefs about marriage.

Please share your views below:

It would be better to ensure the legal definition of what constitutes a non-religious belief is specific and restrictive to make it genuinely reflective and useful. A stronger definition would by its nature exclude commercial operations wishing to exploit the new system.

Consultation Question 25:

No

Please expand on your answer:

These are incredibly insufficient qualifications and will be exploited by companies looking for commercial profit, at the expense of both state-provided civil marriages AND genuine belief-based organisations. This is a substantial risk, particularly when coupled with the proposals about profit and gain.

The problem with the commercialisation of marriage is that individuals would not need to meet any required standards of a reputable organisation or qualify under its training. They could simply join with others in a similar position (ie looking to run a business) and operate with unacceptably low standards.

Under these proposed qualifications any person could call themselves a "Christian celebrant" and join together with others to perform weddings - This would undermine genuine religious marriage. The same is true of people calling themselves "humanist celebrants". Members of the public would be confused by the lack of consistency, and would be open to exploitation by untrained, unqualified commercial operators who have no meaningful alignment to a religious or humanist worldview.

It is therefore essential to include a point under the criteria which states that in order to qualify, the organisation "must not be principally engaged in conducting marriages and/or training celebrants to conduct marriages". It would be prudent to require that the organisation has been in continuous existence for a minimum of ten years, has been performing non-legal marriages for at least five years and that it has procedures in place for discipline and de-accreditation of its celebrants. Finally a much higher minimum number of members (as in Australian law) would make the criteria stronger, eg 2,000 members.

A buildings-based system for deciding where marriages can legally take place, which we have currently, is useful for many religious groups who do meet in meaningful buildings. It is worth noting here that location is highly significant in humanist weddings, as humanists believe the meaning in life is something we create for ourselves, and maximising happiness is the greatest good. Therefore humanist couples should be able to have their humanist wedding in whatever location (with consent of course!) is most meaningful to them.

Consultation Question 28:

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 29:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This would be liable to undermine the dignity and sincerity of marriage in England and Wales. It would be more similar to marriages in Las Vegas than anywhere in the UK or Europe.

Vital to me, many commercial celebrants already claim to be able to perform "humanist weddings" in spite of having received no training in how to do so, having no affiliation at all with a humanist organisation, and in fact acting purely as an "independent" (which is in fact a synonym for "commercial" in the context of marriage celebrants). Couples are therefore already being misled and disappointed, and this new proposal would exacerbate the situation further.

Any organisation which has proper procedures for selection, training, discipline and de-accreditation of its celebrants would also be impacted. Were a celebrant de-accredited by Humanists UK for example, they could set up as a commercial independent celebrant offering "humanist" ceremonies. This would undermine the procedures and the organisation's ability to maintain standards across the profession.

The impact on religious weddings would be the same, as again many commercial celebrants already offer "fully religious services" with NO affiliation to a religion and no training in place qualifying them.

The huge regulation and monitoring to ensure that this system is not exploited to the detriment of couples, is simply not warranted. There are no clear benefits to couples of allowing commercial independent operators to conduct legal marriages. The ONLY benefits would be to individuals profiting from the unsuitable marketing above ie "Christian celebrants", "humanist celebrants" who are in fact not trained or affiliated. The risks are too high, the problems too varied and the benefits are negligible at best.

For these reasons ceremonies conducted by commercial celebrants should not be given legal recognition. However, since the Law Commission is bound, by its terms of reference, to put forward a scheme by which commercial celebrants could gain legal recognition for their marriages, the Commission should stop short of recommending their scheme but rather point out its problems.

Celebrants should charge a reasonable fee for their work, reflecting the time and effort put into crafting a humanist ceremony. This proposed rule works well in Scotland and Northern Ireland. It helps to prevent profiteering and exploitation of couples.

Current charges for humanist ceremonies do vary across England and Wales (reflecting different living costs ), and charges vary according to how much time is needed to prepare content for different types of ceremony. So a set figure probably cannot be too closely given. However guidance on how celebrants/officiants can comply with profit and gain rules would be extremely beneficial.

Consultation Question 45:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This proposal is far too vague.

It ignores the special role of civil marriage in England and Wales. This is to provide couples with a form of marriage which is completely unrelated to any religion or belief system. Registrars would be permitted to include content from their own religion, which could make couples feel incredibly uncomfortable.

Registrars should not be legally required to conduct services with religious content which is against their own beliefs. This could lead to employment law cases being brought.

The state should not get involved in performances of religion or belief. Neutrality in the context is fundamental so as to treat all people equally and avoid establishing one religion or belief over another. This is clear in human rights case law. Humanist marriages should be equally recognised with religious marriages, separate to civil (ie completely non-religious non-belief based, state provided) marriages.

Many religious groups do not wish the state to become involved in matters of faith. As a humanist I would be concerned if a state officiant claimed to include humanist elements in their marriage ceremony with no training in these aspects and no affinity with the belief system.

This proposal is further confused by the idea that commercial operators might be able to conduct legal marriages. I have stated concerns about this elsewhere. Basically commercial celebrants market themselves as being able to mix and match religious and humanist content, and this is a serious concern. They do this for reasons of profit and to extend their market. Couples are at risk of exploitation, disappointment and inaccurate advertisement.

Please share your views below:

If religious or humanist content is requested by the couple because it has cultural or sentimental associations, it might be permitted. It should be for the officiant/celebrant to decide if the couple's motivations are cultural/sentimental.

Examples:

- No act of worship should be included (eg reading of the lord's prayer)
- Hymn associated with sport team might be included (eg Jerusalem)

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

For humanist couples location is incredibly important. Humanist weddings are reflective of the couple's beliefs and what is important to them. It is therefore essential that they are able to choose a setting that is meaningful to them.

My husband and I chose to get married in a volunteer-run community theatre. The specific place is important to us, and although it had no marriage licence covering it, we were absolutely convinced it was the setting which would bring us most joy and reflect us as a couple.

Most couples get married only once in their lives and so the occasion should absolutely be in a place that they choose. The setting should be fitting for the significance of the rite of passage. What makes it fitting, is that the couple love it and have chosen it because it is perfectly suited to their circumstance.

This is so closely linked with a humanist way of life - Humanists proactively weigh up what is right for them. Humanists choose how to live their lives based on science, reason, kindness, empathy and ultimately make an individual choice in all they do. The place that they get married is no different and should be individually chosen.

outdoors,, on inland waters such as lakes or rivers,, in the air, and/or, in private homes.

Please share your views below:

All of these places could be appropriate settings, provided that health and safety can be assured, and that the dignity of marriage can be maintained. Weddings on water or in the air might not always be suitable, the motives of the couple should be assessed in making a decision on this. That is, the officiant could ask the question "Is this location meaningful to the couple? Or has it been chosen for some other inappropriate reason?"

Costs to couples would be greatly reduced if they could have meaningful ceremonies which are also legal. They would no longer have to have a separate civil ceremony with all the associated costs of two events.

There also needs to be clear guidance as to the nature of "dignity and solemnity", both as a safeguard and also to help the officiant. The responsibility should cover all aspects of the ceremony, including venue, tone and content. The officiant should not feel pressured to give way to a couple's wishes if he does not feel that there is sufficient dignity and solemnity in the service (the next question does seem to cover these caveats).

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The public declarations that exist are very important both to couples and to those around them, and are a fundamental part of the marriage service. Having the statements made at the ceremony itself is another important safeguard.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The wedding service goes beyond an individual couple's wishes. It is a time-honoured ceremony which upholds the legal and human commitment and solemnity, gives weight to the vows and is at the root of why people decide on marriage rather than another form of commitment. There is already considerable flexibility within services including choices of wording and music and the existing forms are an additional safeguard to the dignity of a ceremony. It is about a legal and in many cases religious commitment and honour, and not about personalisation, and should endure beyond any individual choices.

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Again, this is because I consider it an important safeguard, and also because, as with the importance of the public declarations in the marriage ceremony, it highlights the public nature of a marriage service and the importance of declaring the commitment in the presence of others.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Again, this could seriously undermine the solemnity as well as the safety of the ceremony, and it personalises this important ceremony far beyond what should be fundamental.

on inland waters such as lakes or rivers,, in the air, and/or, in private homes.

Please share your views below:

I agree that there should be stipulations as to what does not constitute a solemn, dignified and safe venue, as well as what does.

This is a very personal view, but I feel that we are so fortunate to have a wonderful, meaningful marriage ceremony and the themed weddings that take place in Las Vegas for example, or the funny weddings that we sometimes laugh at on comedy shows (Vicar of Dibley!) just don't seem to be who we are or want to be. It is important to realise that any "opening up" seems to make things crumble very quickly, so that a service that is so very important and fundamental to many couples, and a sacrament to many religions, would be undermined for them. There needs to be a very clear bar, a standard of solemn and dignified, that will need meeting.

Consultation Question 49:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This goes back to the views expressed about the public and open nature of marriage and the importance to others of being able to attend a ceremony.

I agree that it should continue to be publicly displayed online and only where it is absolutely clear that there is a risk of serious harm by displaying it should this not take place. NO! - public policy and morality are constantly changing and this would too easily become a mechanism to punish those organisations who disagree with the latest moral view being pushed and too hastily agreed by legislators. It makes it too easy for government to become discriminatory. It should focus on those organisations that actively promote illegal behaviour such as violent overthrow of properly constituted government

Why would there be any benefit to this proposal? If there are sufficient official registrars that uphold the law and ensure that the necessary obligations are fulfilled, this is not necessary. There is a danger that if independent officiants are appointed they would not take the solemn nature of marriage seriously

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This appears to do away with the prescribed words and therefore marriage becomes whatever the couple choose it to mean. This undermines the seriousness and solemn commitments which undergird marriage and potentially trivialises not only the wedding ceremony but marriage itself.

Consultation Question 19:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Marriage is a serious lifelong commitment and needs to be recorded as such.

Consultation Question 20:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

If the marriage is a civil wedding, no other officiants are necessary besides a qualified registration officer.

Consultation Question 21:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

In the case of a Anglican wedding, only one officiant is needed.

Consultation Question 22:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

No need to change this.

Consultation Question 23:

No

Please expand on your answer:

It is safer and more substantial recognition of the commitment to retain the current limitations for a civil or Anglican registrar to be present.

Consultation Question 24:

No

Please expand on your answer:

It should possible for a 'religious' or 'non-religious' ceremony to take place. But the actual commitment and legal recognition of the marriage must take place before a qualified local civil registrar. This is a safeguard not only for the solemnity of the marriage but also for the protection of vulnerable participants - e.g. in forced marriages.

Please share your views below:

The wedding 'ceremony' can be separated from the official, legal commitment as happens now, or take place at the same time, but the legal, binding commitment should be officiated by a civil or anglican registrar.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

It is important to express a public declaration of legitimacy to marry at the time of the commitment, not just during 'preliminaries'.

Consultation Question 43:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

The officiant will need to see constraints to ensure that the marriage is solemn and dignified

Consultation Question 44:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 45:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

There is no reason why there cannot be a combined ceremony which includes a (non-Anglican) religious or non-religious service, provided all the actual legal commitments of the civil registration are carried out at the same time.

Please share your views below:

Commitments are primarily made before God in religious ceremonies, but the State is present to ensure it is a matter of public record for which the participants will be legally accountable. There is no problem in including both forms of content.

Consultation Question 46:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Sometimes people prefer to separate the legal/State requirement from the religious service. The only difficulty is that the legal date of the wedding is different from the ceremonial date. It should be possible to nominate a legally-recognised substitute date (the ceremonial one) for all subsequent purposes.

Consultation Question 47:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

It is sufficient that there are a civil/anglican registrars and recorded witnesses to the event. The risk of a malicious gatecrash is potentially higher.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

There is a need to preserve dignity and solemnity for the occasion.

in the air, and/or

Please share your views below:

Is it necessary to commit to marriage on a plane? Can't they wait till they land?!

Consultation Question 49:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Again - as above the officiant and recorded witnesses are sufficient to verify the commitment.

Consultation Question 50:

Other

Yes

No

Please expand on your answer:

No religious organisation should be compelled by law to have weddings take place on their premises which are contrary to their own beliefs and practice about the purposes and participants of marriage.

If a secular venue is used, it may be for a religious or non-religious (including civil) commitment to take place.

Consultation Question 51:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

But only if they meet strict criteria set down for dignity and solemnity -e.g. that the participants have sufficient time, peace and quiet for the commitments to undertaken with due thought, care and attention. Not in the middle of a theme park ride, or on a high speed jet ski, or in the midst of a nightclub's loud music for example!

Consultation Question 56:

Please expand on your answer:

This needs a lot more careful thought. Getting participants to physically sign is visibly binding, but how does electronic registration work?

Chapter 10: Validity and offences

Consultation Question 57:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

In the case of point 4, there are transgender issues to include too.

No

Please expand on your answer:

The presence of verifiable witnesses is key.

Consultation Question 58:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

And in 1b(ii), there are issues for transgender participants too.

Consultation Question 59:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

This is a difficult one to prove even in the case of a marriage of 'convenience',

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

We have to decide what constitutes true marriage and the attendant responsibilities for which parties are accountable. The best way to do this is to make sure that a publicly recognised commitment is undertaken.

Consultation Question 60:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

It may be the case in a forced marriage that one party is unable or afraid to make their case until some years later.

Consultation Question 63:

Consultation Question 64:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

I don't understand the difference here. Is this a plan to merge civil partnerships and marriage into one form of commitment? Some people may be in a civil partnership for legal safeguards of their partner, but do not see themselves as married. I am in favour of extending civil partnerships to enable non-sexual partnerships to have legal protections. e.g. two sisters sharing a house.

Consultation Question 72:

Consultation Question 73:

Please share your views below:

There should be the same allowance as on land.

Consultation Question 74:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

It may take some time to be able to do this practically.

Chapter 12: Fees

Consultation Question 75:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

If illness or detention is the reason, then a compassionate below-cost fee should apply.

Consultation Question 76:

(2) a separate fee from other forms of giving notice, set nationally on compassionate grounds at below cost level.

Please expand on your answer:

This appears otherwise to be a harsh penalty for someone who is seriously ill.

Consultation Question 77:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Why change this when it may be the simplest, least-cost option for some?

Consultation Question 78:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Not if a frequently used venue has already been passed for use as a location in general.
Private homes and gardens should not attract more than a minimal fee.

Consultation Question 79:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

I have already said this should not then attract an additional fee for every use.

Consultation Question 80:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

It should be equivalent to travel costs only, including travel time charged at a 'retainer' fee appropriate to the fact that no professional service is being performed during the travel itself.

Consultation Question 81:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Is this now calling for an overhaul of costs to register births and deaths too? We need detail here.

Chapter 13: The potential impact of our proposals

Consultation Question 85:

Please share your views below:

The real driver to increase the number of legal marriages is to show that legal verification of a marriage commitment is central to recognition of the union, and the other protections and safeguards provided, especially in regard to any potential future breakdown of the marriage.

Other than that, present law is not the problem - it is the lack of willingness to make a personal lifelong commitment which has been established through a very individualistic, self-centred, hedonist and short-sighted ideology prevalent in our post-modern society.

Consultation Question 86:

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

These are not the big cost drivers - many seem to spend more time and money planning for their 'one day in the limelight, rather than for the lifetime's commitment needed to build a lasting marriage.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

I think the couple should be happy expressing there are no impediments to being married publicly even if that has been a part of the preliminaries. The nature of the wedding ceremony is very important. Changing the detail of the key words that may be said will affect the solemnity and seriousness with which couple commit to one another and the regard in which marriage is held.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Marriage is a lifetime commitment. To allow a couple to come up with any form of words they like and for those to only need the OK of the registrar would be to diminish the serious and solemnity of the commitment being made and damage the very marriage the couple are about to enter. Serious thought and care has gone into what the set words mean and the form in which they are said. To unlink the act of marriage from the serious and weighty promises that are said would be to damage the very institution for the sake of trendy convenience. Please leave the core marriage vows alone. There is ample flexibility in them already and the couple can add more to them

A wedding is not just about the couple getting married. It is about all those witnessing their promise and all those who are already married or going to be married. To render the vows as a personal commitment said in the way the couple want to say it would be to unlink their marriage from marriages that have gone before and will follow.

The couple are making binding vows not just before friends but in the society in which they come. Those vows therefore need to be open to the society to be able to hear. Forced marriage is still a very real issue even in the UK.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Marrying someone is not a light thing. There are careful provisions for which places receive a license to be wedding venues. To allow couples to get married in public convenience or at a fast food restaurant for instance is foolish and degrades and diminishes the seriousness of what is happening.

No

Please expand on your answer:

Many Churches rely on civil registrars to register weddings, as they do not have their own authorised person. It is sometimes impractical for a Church to have an authorised person either because the Church is too small or does not have a minister. I believe that the statement “contrary to public policy or morality” is too subjective an assessment needing more debate. ## Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

I am concerned that not having some form of prescribed wording in the ceremony will undermine the seriousness of marriage. It could relegate the wedding ceremony to a certificate from the govt. It should not undermine the seriousness of the promises made.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

It is more important that a legal wedding ceremony reflects the seriousness of the commitment the parties are making. After all it is a small but important aspect of the ceremony and the rest of the wedding can easily be personalised. Allowing a totally personalised ceremony could easily trivalise marriage. I believe we should strengthen marriage not undermine it given the numbers of broken marriages in our society. If young people are given the impression that it doesn't much matter any more than any other party they may have then it gives a poor message in my humble opinion.

Consultation Question 44:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

There are prescribed words for religious wedding so they are not personalised in the same way as noted in question 43

Consultation Question 45:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

I agree with this completely. I would like to read a passage from the Bible on love at my daughter's civil wedding but am not allowed under current rules and cannot see any rationale for this.

Please share your views below:

Readings from the Bible or other sacred texts linked to marriage/ love/ commitment and songs/hymns to form a part of the ceremony so if one of the couple had a religious faith and the other didn't this could form an acceptable compromise.

No

Please expand on your answer:

This is a valuable part of the celebrations as it shows the wedding is not just a private affair. Whereas if doors are shut it says the opposite that it is a private affair only. Keeping open doors could also be a safeguard against a forced marriage - a last resort maybe but valuable none the less.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Not wishing to say yes or no here as there are obvious advantages to being able to marry at a place of a couple's choosing. However there are a few points of concern here.

- 1.By removing all restrictions this could open the door to inappropriate venues being used such as the example of a sadomasochism dungeon.
2. The setting should not trivialize the ceremony or detract from the seriousness of the wedding ceremony and promises being made.
3. The consultation states that venues would need to be 'dignified' and 'safe', it is unclear what safeguards there will be in place to protect the dignity of the ceremony.

Chapter 13: The potential impact of our proposals

Consultation Question 85:

Please share your views below:

I am not a law practitioner so this is only a personal opinion. I do not believe the current law discourages people from getting married. I cannot see that the proposals set out here will have much effect other than maybe to trivialize marriage.

Consultation Question 46:

No

Please expand on your answer:

There may be many reasons that a couple may wish to celebrate their wedding (not be wedded again) even if their wedding was conducted as a civil wedding; they may later come to experience a conversion or other religious experience which they wish to identify as enhancing their wedding experience earlier, e.g. they wish to celebrate the greater understanding of Marriage now that they have found God to be more important to them and to their marriage vows.

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The solemnity of a wedding might be less so if open to the general public, assuming the possibility of persons not invited spoiling its solemnity.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Regarding the need for solemnity, a church or similar public building normally used for solemn occasions, should be limiting the place for the ceremony.

This would obviate use of inappropriate buildings.

However, open air weddings do take place already in certain circumstances, e.g. beside the sea on a beach; in such cases it might be required for signing registers to take place in the aforesaid public buildings or a church.

Chapter 5: Officiants

Consultation Question 19:

Not Answered

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 20:

No

Please expand on your answer:

It is paradoxical for the Law Commission to have a goal to make informal ceremonies meaningful in law whilst seemingly suggesting that religious ceremonies should stop being meaningfully recognised in law. Currently around half of churches rely on civil registrars to officiate ceremonies due to them having no 'authorised' person. It makes no sense to change this setup, muddying the waters and causing smaller churches to risk falling foul of the new marriage law due to unfamiliar procedure and paperwork.

Consultation Question 26:

Please share your views below:

It is strange that such subjective wording is being used; i.e. "contrary to public policy or morality", as this can change over time and has the potential to exclude churches with unpopular but reasonable and legal points of view from nominating officiants. The criteria should be purely objective excluding organisations that take part in unlawful activities, support terrorism or plot to undermine our democracy or rule of law.

Consultation Question 29:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The idea to allow independent officiants should progress no further. At present registrars are trained state officials or religious representatives with strongly held beliefs on marriage. This assumption would be undermined by the decision to allow independent officiants. There are many 'fun' but not necessarily solemn or legally binding independently officiated 'marriage' ceremonies that would become legally binding if independent officiants were allowed. There is a dignity to marriage that is not readily demonstrated by two bungee jumping individuals throwing themselves off a bridge during a ceremony for example.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Prescribed words are important to give meaning to the ceremony. Distilling the ceremony down to a basic declaration of consent being given by both parties does not give any structure or public clarity to what the individuals are actually consenting to. The prescribed words are a small but important part of the ceremony and could be easily included at some point in proceedings. Marriage is all about promises and commitment and yet the proposals could lead to ceremonies with few or no words. This risks making the point of the ceremony and promises said or knowingly unsaid in private virtually meaningless and will undoubtedly mean that the institution is taken very much less seriously with far reaching consequences for family cohesion and children.

Marriage is a public declaration and should have BOTH a verbal AND signed element to the declaration. In addition, there should be opportunity for the public to bring impediments to the proceedings right up to the point of legal/verbal declaration as it is important for everyone to know if one of the parties has not been truthful or is living a double life prior to the other party consenting to a life of marriage.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The personalisation of the ceremony need to be secondary to the seriousness of the commitments being entered into. Many independent officiants may be of the opinion that the fun, theme and activity elements of the ceremony are more important than the meaning, dignity and solemnity of marriage. However, this would be to the detriment of the standing of marriage in our culture and will affect the seriousness with which couples take their vows and promises they make.

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Marriage is not a private affair and the open door requirement is an indication that it is important to society in general. The requirement is an important safeguard against forced marriages, bigamy etc.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

Not Answered

Please expand on your answer:

Please share your views below:

Consultation Question 49:

No

Please expand on your answer:

It is important that the location is suitable, solemn and accessible for the general public. The requirement for the wedding party to be a PADI qualified scuba diver for example in order to attend an underwater ceremony would unfairly put up barriers to stop the elderly, family members or a member of the general public with an interest in attending. Wording used such as 'dignified' and 'safe' could be broadly interpreted and doesn't necessarily mean that the vows, promises and commitments are easily heard by those who for family, friendship or community reasons have a vested interest in hearing the ceremony in order to better support and encourage the couple going forwards.

While it would be advantageous for churches that meet in a shared community centre, for example, to be able to conduct marriage ceremonies, I am not convinced that no restrictions on venues is a good idea. It could logically be assumed that any building that is deemed suitable by the Charity Commission to house a 'church' is also suitable, dignified and safe to conduct a wedding ceremony. Beyond this it is not obvious that any such safeguards would be in place for other locations.

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

A wedding is not just about the couple! This whole ceremony must be dignified and full of integrity as a lifelong commitment to each other and must not be allowed to watered down to just a bit of fun. therefore specific phrases and commitments to each other must be expressed publicly and the couple must honour each other and to the formal union between them

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Absolutely not - this would water down this wonderful and much celebrated act of commitment. The current formality, seriousness and solemnity must be maintained for the good of society as a whole

Chapter 13: The potential impact of our proposals

Consultation Question 85:

Please share your views below:

Current law should be strengthened to promote marriage which is between two people who wish to share the rest of their lives together and the ceremony should be worthy of this with solemnity, seriousness and respect.

Consultation Question 86:

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

A couple should not enter into marriage for a bit of fun and should be willing to save money in advance and plan out what should be the loveliest day of their lives together and commit to each other for life.

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

Current laws and regulations are satisfactory

Consultation Question 87:

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

making arbitrary statements at a "ceremony" is whimsical and capricious. It redefines marriage as a meaningless activity, devoid of any sobriety and appropriate sacrifice.

Moreover, Marriage is of specific interest to the state as it often creates children! and these children will be living under its authority, so keeping it a "private" affair is counter intuitive to the states interests.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This is post modern garbage. It is calling a stone a piece of bread.

Or analogously we could all be university graduates by drafting our own degrees and having a "graduation ceremony " which we autonomously defined.

If there is no objective criteria for a wedding ceremony, why limit this to only marriage. Lets consistently apply this to all of life.

I could be a GP simply cause I read medical journals and i think i have learned enough about anatomy. easy!

this idea you propose is asinine.

This proposal sounds good but “contrary to public policy or morality” is too subjective an assessment. It would risk those with unpopular but entirely legal views being excluded from nominating officiants.

The test should focus on objective criteria. These could include promoting purposes that are illegal or support illegal activity (such as terrorism), that advocate the violent overthrow of democracy, or that undermine the rule of law.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

A wedding ceremony can be whatever a couple wants with regards to music, people, outfits, venue, day, time etc. However, to make the vows non verbal or to be silly or frivolous is very serious. Wedding vows should be made publicly and seriously and in front of witnesses. People need to realise how important these vows are as otherwise it will just become a 'tick box' exercise and a piece of paper from the Government authorising the marriage. The vows should have legally binding words and meaning attached to them.

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

A wedding should be a public event in which anyone can come. Marriage should be a public thing for everyone to be proud of and to support and encourage the couple. If weddings are allowed to happen in secret then this will make forced marriages, bigamy and polygamy easier.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This could lead to all sorts of problems and again make the ceremony frivolous and silly. People could get married underwater or in the air and not be focusing on the vows and ceremonies. It could lead to safety issues as well.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

As all wedding ceremonies are more than just about the couple, and effect the community in which they live, as well as their family relations, it is important that there is a dignified ceremony using prescribed language/words. It is also important that specific phrases are used which clearly convey the freely given consent of both people (in person) to the wedding and to the lifelong commitment that they are entering into. This commitment should include 'promises'.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Marriage is a solemn dignified event, supported by the law of the land; there should be some minimum requirements about the ceremony to ensure that the event is dignified and symbolic of the important step that the two people are taking.

Consultation Question 46:

No

Please expand on your answer:

There can be circumstances when or where a religious wedding ceremony cannot be undertaken, where a civil/registry office ceremony does take place, and when the couple choose to have a less formal 'religious' wedding-type service event (not amounting to a formal wedding ceremony).

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Weddings in the UK have been, and should continue to be PUBLIC events effecting the whole community.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The dignified status attached to a wedding ceremony needs to be reflected in the choice of venue, and be appropriate to the solemnity involved; churches and other faith-based buildings and registry offices continue to be the only venues that would meet this requirement. However, there should be some provision to facilitate weddings of those who might be in hospital at risk of death (rather than requiring evidence that the person is seriously ill and is unlikely to recover), or, in very limited circumstances, are housebound.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The couple must be present at the wedding ceremony or else it trivialises marriage. In addition the ceremony cannot be allowed to use whatever words the couple chooses. It's too solemn for that.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

A ceremony should not just be allowed because the couple wants it. The couple must not just be allowed to choose their own words on such a solemn occasion but such words must be appropriate for such a significant event.

Consultation Question 44:

While I agree with the proposed responsibility, there needs to be a clear definition of what constitutes "dignity" and "solemnity".

The proposed responsibility should involve a wider remit to ensure that the actual ceremony and what is included in the ceremony should uphold the "dignity" and "solemnity" of marriage.

The proposal needs more substance. It is too airy-fairy as outlined.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The idea that someone can get married by simply signing a schedule and not actually attending the ceremony is unacceptable. The ceremony should continue to require public declarations, not merely whatever they might like to say nor allowing them to say nothing. Public declarations are a fundamental part of the ceremony.

The proposal risks undermining the dignity and solemnity of marriage and of the ceremony. It also puts at risk the seriousness of the marriage commitment being made.

If couples want to add words of their own to those prescribed, then so be it. Surely, the few prescribed words should be retained in order to show that the couple both consent to a lifetime commitment. Marriage is a union entered into in the eyes of the law and of society. It is a public commitment, not a frivolous thing of the moment.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The dignity and solemnity of marriage and of the marriage ceremony are fundamental. Couples who enter into marriage are making a public declaration in which both the law and society are involved and must continued to be involved.

The officiant is there to conduct a dignified ceremony in which the seriousness of the marriage commitment is clearly understood. He is not the Master of Ceremonies at an entertainment event!

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The "open doors" requirement came into being hundreds of years ago to prevent forced marriage. Sadly, forced marriage continues to be a serious problem in society and so the removal of this requirement is unacceptable.

I again make the point that marriage is a dignified, serious public commitment entered into by both parties. It is not just a private matter.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Any change in the law must continue to uphold the dignity and solemnity of marriage and of the location of the ceremony. the marriage venue should be appropriate to the making of a serious, public commitment.

Please share your views below:

While a wider range of buildings than actual church buildings is acceptable, getting married in a burger bar, or in a hot air balloon basket, or in a boat sailing down the river is hardly dignified or safe. Private homes do not fit the need to marry in public with open doors.

Again, we need more clarity on what constitutes a venue which meets the need for dignity or safety. These terms need to be fully detailed and proper safeguards must be specified.

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

But again, it is not only the officiant's duty but it must remain a legal requirement that the location is safe and dignified. The interests of all those attending the wedding must be considered as also the interests of the law and of society.

Consultation Question 2:

Please share your views below:

The wedding we had was lovely but very restrictive. We could not include personalised elements that mattered to us. We opted for a civil ceremony.

We opted for a legal wedding as we wanted this security but had the option been open to have a humanist legally recognised marriage we would have chosen this.

For the couples I work with, they want to have a ceremony that reflects their non religious and humanist beliefs but are prevented from this being also legally recognised.

Consultation Question 3:

Please share your views below:

If outdoor weddings were legally recognised, many more couples may have been able to begin their marriage this year. This would also have enabled more wedding industry suppliers to maintain their business.

Remote access to pre-wedding administration would also have enabled safer accessible practices.

Consultation Question 85:

Please share your views below:

I believe that if more couples were able to have a legally recognised marriage that truly reflected their non religious or Humanist views, more couples would choose to have a legally recognised marriage.

Consultation Question 86:

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

Allowing legally recognised marriage that occur in a wider range of locations. Would enable more couples to marry in a location that is financially accessible to them.

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

Couples who wish to have a humanist and or non religious weddings are forced to pay extra to have a separate legally recognised marriage.

This was a choice we were forced to make and had to choose a wedding that did not fully meet our beliefs but was legally recognised because we could not pay for two.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

For the sake of certainty and consistency, in which the state has a legitimate interest, require all weddings to include prescribed words, but with flexibility as to the precise wording - preserving a version of the words of contract, along the lines of "I take you to be my spouse"; as per 6.51 and .52 of the consultation document.

You have recognised the need for a ceremony and express consent, but without such words providing a minimum of content, there is a lack of clarity about what is being agreed to and what it is all about. For traditions in which such words are not called for, such words would be merely complementary and need not take away the focus from the personally-meaningful part of the ceremony.

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The seriousness of the commitment should mean that both need to be present at the ceremony. It should not be allowed that they say anything they like. This could give way to completely undermining the seriousness of the marriage commitment. It has already become adaptable to suit what couples may wish to say. Therefore it isn't unreasonable that specific phrases are used by both parties to confirm that what they are entering into is a life long commitment.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The prescribed words are but a small part of a wedding ceremony but contain solemn promises made between the two parties. Without them a wedding ceremony could become virtually meaningless, in which no promises were made.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This full customising of weddings could further diminish the seriousness of the commitment that the parties are making to each other, and will encourage commercialisation, in which those willing to bow to the wishes of the couple will profit the most. Couples might want to blend together different elements from various faiths in a way that is offensive to people of those faiths.

Inappropriate venues might be chosen which do not preserve the dignity, importance and solemnity of the occasion. If the Law Commission considers 'in the air' to be dignified and safe, it shows that the law could be interpreted far too broadly.

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Why change what ain't broke and is anyway a long enshrined custom consonant with the establishment of the Church of England and (previously) the Church in Wales?

Consultation Question 23:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

1. Yes, but the State should retain the right to prevent both 'religious' and 'non-religious' organisations deemed to be frivolous or sinister from conducting weddings. There is religion and 'religion' and there is 'OK secular' and 'Not OK secular'. No problem with, say, ordinary decent secular, humanist or atheist organisations of course. But marriage must not be cheapened or subverted.

2. Proposed officiants must be registered by the State. Same reasons as before.

Consultation Question 24:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Such a definition isn't tight enough. IT is much too 'nice'. Leaves the door open to some very weird and probably unwholesome possibilities.

Please share your views below:

Yes. And for reasons along the line of previous response.

Consultation Question 25:

No

Please expand on your answer:

1. 20 is far too low. Try 250.

2. And sincerity? Some beliefs very sincerely held can be very odd. Others can be very pernicious.

Don't start nudging the door open to polygamy, either.

Consultation Question 26:

Please share your views below:

Yes. There should be express exclusion. See previous answers.

Consultation Question 27:

Please share your views below:

Yes, if they are deemed OK organisations.

Consultation Question 28:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Subject to the acceptability (to the State) of the general credentials of the organisations in question.

Consultation Question 29:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Not unless they are duly examined by a competent panel for probity and appropriate ability. Real danger of too many glamorous but venal and possibly harmful cowboys.

Consultation Question 30:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Only if the organisations themselves have legal accreditation as fit and proper organisations.

Consultation Question 31:

No

Please expand on your answer:

These requirement aren't nearly enough. They need to be demonstrably fit and worthy people in a much fuller sense - as you might hope for, say, in regard to a recognised church minister in good standing or an accredited and worthy representative of, say, the Humanist Association.

Consultation Question 32:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes, very much so.

Consultation Question 33:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Very much NOT. Defend us from a cult of celebrity wedding celebrants, albeit local celebrities. Please: NO big business officiants, and NO showbiz officiants. Some Commissioners doubtless feel there's nothing wrong in making weddings more fun or more dramatic (albeit very much more expensive in many cases). But the dignity, not just of weddings, but of marriage, will be even more at risk that it already is in our society. A committed and continuing union in love and faithfulness for life, with full regard to the best care and support of children, needs to be kept well in sight, hard as it is to realise in all cases. The State will not serve the country well by letting ordinary people's to-die-for weddings become too expensive and allowing marriage standards slip further.

Consultation Question 34:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Very much concur. But, please, DON'T go for independent marriage officiants.

Consultation Question 35:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Absolutely. But the Commissioners will need to put decent flesh on those well-meant, easily said bones. And how do you police this desideratum?

Consultation Question 36:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes, but duly courteous and practical guidance.

Consultation Question 37:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

But there should be some appeal procedure available against a nominating organisation.

Consultation Question 38:

Consultation Question 39:

Not Answered

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 40:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Would suggest time-limited authorisation (for say two years) in the first instance, with authorisation being made permanent thereafter if all is well from an officiant's nominating organisation's point of view (and the GRO).

Consultation Question 41:

Please expand on your answer:

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Certainly not in the case of Christian weddings. See the BCP Solemnization of Matrimony priest's prologue: ...not by any to be entertained, nor taken in hand unadvisedly, lightly or wantonly...but reverently, discretely, advisedly and soberly...

Some degree of propriety and commonsense and safety should be observed.

outdoors,, on inland waters such as lakes or rivers,, in private homes.

Please share your views below:

Avoid letting weddings become contests in the bizarre or the frivolous. Not keen on in the air (or at the bottom of the English Channel).

Consultation Question 49:

Please expand on your answer:

A little reluctantly, since sound marriages are a public good and should be encouraged as such.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

It is necessary that both parties to the marriage contract know what they are agreeing to, and the implications of the contract. They should also be able to declare they are free to enter into the contract, without similar commitments with other people. They need to be able to understand and to express their consent clearly. Just signing something is not enough. The existing prescribed words are just right. If people have trouble with them, they need greater preparation for the event, with the help of translators and other supporters. The marriage commitment ceremony should not be made lighter and less serious.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Getting married is not a personal matter. It is a matter that affects the community, and the nation in general. The processes around making such a serious commitment should be seriously conducted and able to stand up to public scrutiny. This personalisation proposal risks offending the community and society, and making marriage more like buying property than the important life event it is.

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The marriage commitment affects society in general and many people beyond those invited to participate in the event. Wedding ceremonies should continue to be open to the public. Problems arising, through unseemly behaviour for example, can always be dealt with through existing laws.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Weddings should continue to take place in licensed premises only, so that the location may be dignified, and the public may have the access I have argued for above. The number and type of premises should be kept limited so that people seeking to marry have to make some effort and prepare to enter it. The marriage commitment of the couple concerned affects society at large and the institution needs the approval and protection of that society. How else can we ensure that marriage is taken seriously and society respects the commitment the people concerned have made?

Please share your views below:

None of the above. Leave things as they are. As to outdoor venues, participants are less safe outdoors from those who object to the marriage.

Consultation Question 49:

No

As above, public access is essential.

Please expand on your answer:

Period of time is not as important as realising solemnity of agreement they are entering into.

Consultation Question 7:

Please share your views below:

Interviews should be face to face in person or online. Perhaps with each person being interviewed separately if there is concern about forced marriage.

Consultation Question 8:

Please share your views below:

This should continue to be possible. Marriage should not have to be unduly delayed if work takes people away.

Consultation Question 33:

No

Please expand on your answer:

There should not be independent officiants. All officiants must be held accountable by some authority other than their own.

Consultation Question 34:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

There should not be independent celebrants.

Consultation Question 35:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Marriage is a solemn undertaking and the officiant should make this clear to the the couple being married. The ceremony itself should reflect the nature of the commitment being made.

Any new legislation must clearly state what is meant by the "dignity" and "solemnity" of marriage. This must be reflected in the location, and content, of the ceremony.

Consultation Question 36:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Ceremonies must reflect the commitment being entered into, so guidance underling this should be issued to all officiants.

Consultation Question 37:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

The original organisation should be approached in the first instance.

Consultation Question 38:

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Consent should be given verbally - or in sign if verbal communication is not possible. The question regarding impediment or hindrance should still be asked so each party is publicly stating their desire to be married in the eyes of the law and their freedom to take on this responsibility.

Vows/commitments/declarations should be spoken as part of the ceremony - signing a document is not sufficient. This is a public declaration of this couples realisation of the seriousness of the commitment they are making in getting married. The wording used must be based on some basic legal structure, as it is at present, as this is a legally binding ceremony and therefore cannot be left solely to the couple's own wishes.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Marriage is a legally binding ceremony and therefore must abide by some legal guidelines as to content - as discussed in question 42 - and form . A wedding is a legal, public declaration of a couple's commitment to their relationship and the ceremony and celebration should reflect the the solemnity of the occasion.

Consultation Question 44:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

They must still meet the legal requirements of all marriage ceremonies.

Consultation Question 45:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Please share your views below:

A hymn or prayer should be allowed. If there is more than that it is probably no longer a civil ceremony.

Consultation Question 46:

No

Please expand on your answer:

If a couple wishes to have a religious service after their civil ceremony they should be free to do so.

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

A wedding ceremony is a public expression of a couple's commitment to a lifelong marriage. Removing the "open doors" nature of the ceremony risks taking away the public concern with the marriage.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

A wedding is a solemn, legally binding agreement which should take place in an appropriate venue. This could be a community hall a local church uses for its services if they do not have their own building.

outdoors,

Please share your views below:

An outdoor venue may be suitable but the other suggestions here are not suitable. Allowing a ceremony anywhere is not appropriate for the solemnising of a legally binding marriage.

Consultation Question 49:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Civil wedding locations should be regularly available for the solemnization of civil marriages.

Consultation Question 50:

Other

Other

Other

Please expand on your answer:

As far as possible ceremonies should take place in venues which support the couples beliefs. If a suitable venue is unavailable eg religious/non-religious venue is too small, provision should be made for the ceremony to take place in a suitably sized venue.

Consultation Question 51:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

In line with their legal duty to hold a dignified and solemn ceremony this could be the responsibility of the officiant.

Consultation Question 52:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Clarity needs to be given to as to what "safe and dignified" is as regards a suitable location for this solemn, legally binding, publicly recognised ceremony.

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

The legislation must include clear safeguards regarding venue to ensure any chosen location is suitable for the solemnisation of marriage.

Consultation Question 53:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Please share your views below:

Pre-approval should be carried out by a national body to ensure consistency of suitable venues.
A venue could registered and need to reapply for approval every 2 or 3 years.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Public declarations are needed to show how serious is the commitment and wider society is involved in this, it isn't just between the couple. The ceremony already has a lot of flexibility.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The ceremony needs to be appropriate for the significance of the event. It's a public declaration and needs to reflect that marriage should be taken seriously. Any old form of ceremony just won't do.

Of course, that is the least one would expect from such an official. I would stress that you should define what you mean by 'dignity' and 'solemnity' of marriage so that the official understands precisely what is expected of him in such a responsible position.

Consultation Question 36:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Absolutely! I can't believe you have raised such a question.

Consultation Question 37:

No

Please expand on your answer:

No, this should rest with the General Register Office itself, which has overall responsibility. They should have a Register in place to keep track of all officiants, to ensure that correct procedures are carried out, otherwise any Tom, Dick, or Harry could appoint himself. Marriage must be treated as a serious commitment and the authority should act accordingly.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

It should not be possible for someone to get married without being present at the wedding ceremony. Simply signing the marriage schedule is inadequate. Couples would be able to say anything they like or nothing at all. This is a major departure from the public declarations always considered foundational to the legal marriage ceremony. This seriously risks undermining the solemnity of the wedding ceremony and denying the seriousness of the commitment being made. Besides, there is already a large amount of flexibility in the wedding ceremony. What possibly can be wrong with the prescribed words which are minimal. Surely it is not very much to ask that some specific phrases are used to show that both people freely consent to the lifetime commitment they are entering into.

Completely personalising their ceremony sends out the wrong signals to couples and would give a totally wrong view of marriage. A wedding is not just about the couple. The couple enter into a union which is understood by society and has been legally defined. So society and the law have an interest in the making of a public declaration. The logic of a wholly self-defined marriage ceremony is for marriage to be decoupled from the law and wider society. Why does everyone love to hear of an intended marriage? Because it is part of society and has been so for many centuries. What you suggest here is that marriage would become an entirely private matter which it certainly is not.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This is a non sensical question proposing that all weddings can take whatever form and ceremony the parties choose, if an officiant agrees. As outlined above in the previous answer to question 42, you are not taking into account the seriousness and solemnity of a marriage ceremony. You are suggesting treating the wedding ceremony the same as the couple choosing what outfits they will wear or where they will have their reception held. A wedding is a public declaration in which society and the state have an interest.

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The “open doors” requirement helps convey the public nature of wedding declarations and acts as a protection against forced marriage. The problem of forced marriage is still with us and removing the requirement would again encourage a false perception that marriage is a private matter without any public significance.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Anywhere? Really! Here again you are ignoring the seriousness and solemnity of a marriage ceremony. Venues should not simply be allowed because marrying couples want them, but because they are appropriate places to hold such a significant ceremony. Legal weddings should take place in venues that are compatible with the dignity of marriage.

Consultation Question 3:

Please share your views below:

Our daughter was married in August 2020. She lives [REDACTED]. Her Husband lived in separate accommodation [REDACTED]. Neither attended a CofE church but wanted to marry in a church of England in order to have the formality and solemnity and the wording of the Church of England ceremony because it highlights the serious nature of the marriage contract as well as the commitments each is making to the other as well as being in the presence of witnesses who can both hold them but support them in keeping the promises made.

Thankfully, because of COVID, there did not need to be Banns which all takes time. It did mean (as I understand) a special licence with concomitant costs paid to the Diocesan Registrar which was a bit tiresome. Proving a link to a church was a little more problematic but not impossible. The costs of the local church we used did seem quite high and a possible barrier to marriage for some.

At another level the COVID limitations made the wedding much more intimate and memorable, Indeed we had two receptions by way of garden setting barbecues to enable more people to celebrate the marriage. Both were relaxed and informal events without the enormous pressure of large white weddings etc.

another period of time.

Please expand on your answer:

Whilst accepting that some emergency weddings may be needed - e.g. where one party has a terminal illness or maybe is unexpectedly called to work abroad etc., the main principle should be a longer period to reduce the risk of forced or convenience marriages to gain some privileges.

Also see my answer to Q9 about "searches". If there is only a minimum period then it will be insufficient to look into sham/forced/incapacitous weddings

Marriage is a contract with the intention that it be lifelong. No other significant contract is normally entered without full due diligence etc. As a retired lawyer I am familiar with the fall out that can come with a divorce. There should therefore be much more preparation to ensure that the parties are not just marrying out of emotion but that they are at the very least aware of the issues that can and some of which will almost inevitably will arise.

We do not allow people to drive without going through rigorous tests. The same should apply for marriage. The time period could therefore be weeks or months.

Consultation Question 7:

Agreed for the reasons given. This should be capable of revision if it is found that it is not working in practice.

Consultation Question 9:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

It reduces the risk of bigamy or forced marriage or marriage where one party lacks capacity.

There should be a search facility rather as there is with Grants of Probate so that a concerned parent or social worker etc. can be notified if and as soon as a notice is posted so that a marriage can be stopped rather than having to be unpicked later.

Consultation Question 12:

Please expand on your answer:

Please share your views below:

Consultation Question 13:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

I assume this is because the marriage laws in the other jurisdictions vary with those proposed for England & Wales: in which case I agree.

There may be circumstances where an emergency wedding needs to take place - e.g. a Scottish couple who have complied with all Scottish marriage regulations are in England or Wales and one is seriously injured necessitating an emergency wedding. Such circumstances could be covered by special regulations.

Consultation Question 14:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Your consultation highlights the differences between the different methods of marriage. It should never be overlooked of course that, at heart, the church sees marriage as a God given "sacrament", a union specifically capable of being blessed by God - a perspective no doubt rejected or dismissed by and large by the state - under which the consultation operates. The church requirements may well differ - perhaps as extra rather than separate requirements - depending upon the state's requirements.

Consultation Question 15:

Please share your views below:

No. On the basis that one of the main purposes as I understand is to prevent bigamy etc. This can be an extra requirement but not a separate stand alone requirement: otherwise it is in danger of being utilised to enable forced/sham etc. marriages.

Consultation Question 16:

Please share your views below:

In an ideal situation I do agree. However these regulations will not have happened during COVID and may make it more difficult for people who attend a different denomination or whatever to marry in an Anglican church if they so choose - maybe their "home" church - if you now work in London but lived far away as a child.

Because of the serious nature of a marriage then, if the Anglican church continues to want to have this requirement in its rubric then they should be able. After all marriage, to the church, is a very serious sacrament and commitment.

Consultation Question 17:

Please share your views below:

Why not? At the end of the day both parties can/will lie if they so choose....

It is for this reason that "due diligence" at some point is so critical.

Consultation Question 18:

all weddings should be preceded by civil preliminaries.

Please expand on your answer:

It depends on what the civil preliminaries are. Provided that they do not conflict with CofE or CofW preliminaries it would then be still open to the churches to have their own separate regulations.

Churches may want to have separate preliminaries so that weddings in their premises reflect their religious beliefs and views on the place of marriage

Chapter 5: Officiants

Consultation Question 19:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

I do not feel I understand what the "marriage schedule" is.

What should not happen is that the "marriage schedule" now or in the future contain information or declarations that are inconsistent with the basic information on the current marriage certificate. It should not become a document that is capable of imposing beliefs etc. on others.

Consultation Question 20:

No

Please expand on your answer:

At present there are many non conformist churches (often called house churches) that rely on registration officers to officiate at weddings of their members. I have been a member of such churches and to enforce this proposal is to limit freedom of choice which goes against the whole tenor of the proposals.

As the Church of England is currently having to review its financial commitments with talk of closure of churches and with many other denominations closing churches in recent years this proposal may mean many couples having to opt for a non-religious wedding followed by a blessing in some other setting somewhere - but that is not affordable to many.

Consultation Question 21:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

As happens in church weddings at the moment - though the need for witnesses to the schedule/certificate should be retained - as a double check.

In my wife's family one brother is a professional organist and two are ordained clergy so that it has been possible to have family weddings "in-house": whilst this has not been a problem for us, others might abuse the situation to enable forced/sham etc. ceremonies. There should be some independent "reviewing" at some point therefore.

Consultation Question 22:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 23:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Yes but there should be some criteria/system so as to ensure that organisations do not abuse this facility for whatever purpose. There should also be some underlying agreement as to the purpose of marriage and what is permitted/expected etc. in marriage otherwise the word becomes meaningless. It may be that couples choose to ignore those "standards" etc. but it should not be a smorgasbord of definitions etc. whereby it is a free for all.

Consultation Question 24:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

see above as to concerns that the word marriage and the underlying understanding of what is involved must have universal meaning and connotations unless language etc. is to become even more chaotic and destroyed as a vehicle for communication.

Please share your views below:

This may need to operate on a case by case basis but with overarching principles as with what is and is not regarded as charitable. The problem with this type of arrangement is that it could quickly become a situation whereby every type of belief wants its own type of officiant - e.g. with the way that veganism has been held as a belief system. The issue then becomes that each micro belief system creates its own micro bubble and begins to demand rights etc. seeing itself as another victim in the victimhood society we are creating.

Consultation Question 25:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

See answer to question 24 above.

Consultation Question 26:

Please share your views below:

The danger with this becomes when a traditionally widely held and accepted belief falls foul of current public opinion or orthodoxy - especially where the issue is still controversial - such as perhaps gay marriage. We cannot foresee views that may become accepted in future that are not currently but that should not mean that the state can prevent the organisation from holding those views. Furthermore if the view is on a matter that has nothing to do with marriage should that penalise the group - perhaps on matters such as hanging or some other issue, Nazism, the Holocaust, climate change.

Consultation Question 27:

Please share your views below:

No. Because you have no control over who the organisation nominates to the role. It could become the thin end of the wedge.

Consultation Question 28:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Should there be an appeal system? This would perhaps avoid any future "political correctness" impacting the register.

Consultation Question 29:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Current officiants have to undergo particular training etc. to ensure recognition of the importance of marriage etc. within society. This potentially opens it up to anyone with little to no consideration of the solemnity and importance of both marriage and the role of the wedding as part of that.

Consultation Question 30:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Not as simply as that. There needs to be some common standard and training etc. as at present. This risks trivialising the whole process.

Consultation Question 31:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 32:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

It is already expensive enough simply to get a licence and use a church. It may be said that it is the choice of the individual and "pretty" venues will be overwhelmed if they cannot take advantage accordingly in terms of pricing. On the other hand if the focus is taken off the venue and onto the marriage contract etc. then maybe that is the best solution.

Consultation Question 33:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

This somewhat goes to the heart of the problem. Do we want to create a Hollywood style culture where the emphasis can become so much on the external aspects and not the truth of what two individuals are doing?

I have read that COVID has been a blessing to many because they have been able to avoid the cultural pressure for large weddings which has led some to bankruptcy.

Consultation Question 34:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

It seems the mischief you want to avoid is "profiteering". Perhaps there should be fixed fees for bespoke parts - e.g. the interview, notice, service, certificate - with the officiant and/or venue from whatever "strand" allowed to agree any "extras".

Consultation Question 35:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Maybe there should be an equivalent of OFSTED etc. who can do "secret" visits to ensure this.

Consultation Question 36:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

This should ensure the basic criteria along current lines to ensure a universal understanding and meaning so that if the service/marriage is later challenged there is a clear benchmark to operate against. It would then be for a party to prove otherwise.

Consultation Question 37:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

This could lead to officiants being removed in a "coup" when an organisation splits over an element of belief etc. There perhaps needs to be some independent evidence/hearing/appeal as necessary.

Consultation Question 38:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

subject to rights of appeal etc.

Consultation Question 39:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

subject to rights of appeal etc.

Consultation Question 40:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

but maybe 5 year checking as to continued compliance and suitability etc.

Consultation Question 41:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

In principle but, as indicated above, this could easily become a way of imposing a secular orthodoxy on religious belief if there continues to be change as at present. For instance there are many clergy and church leaders who do not agree with gay marriage of any form and there is some form of exemption so that they do not have to solemnise such marriages. This could override that important conscience exclusion. This could well apply to other faiths and other situations.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

It is critical that the wedding ceremony contain proper and meaningful language and vows etc. that demonstrates what the couple are entering into. If they do not agree with that, then the choice is simply to cohabit or maybe a civil partnership is the option for them. It should not be all things to all people otherwise you hollow out the whole relevance of marriage. If couples want to add their own additional words and vows they can.

It would also then potentially make a divorce all the more complex - what did they agree or not so what should be accepted in a divorce?

It is not sufficient that all that be implied by signing the declaration.

Consultation Question 43:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Provided that the form and ceremony addresses the points in Q42 - otherwise just cohabit etc.

Consultation Question 44:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

It must be possible for a vicar/priest/rabbi etc. to refuse a couple a wedding if s/he does not consider that the couple hold to the beliefs of that faith or has other conscientious objections. It should not be necessary for the individual to disclose these because, in the current febrile climate that could open the individual and their family up to uncalled for humiliation.

As to the form it should, as above, have the necessary words etc. so that there is commonality across all wedding and marriage services.

Consultation Question 45:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

agreed: subject to the minimal required wording being included.

Please share your views below:

I think any religious wording should be allowed including readings from scriptures etc. The argument against has not been made to my view.

Consultation Question 46:

No

Please expand on your answer:

As at present there may be practical reasons why a religious service cannot be held first: in most cases the second religious service is merely a blessing.

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Wedding guests are often invited on the premise that they are also invited to the reception after. That can prevent friends from simply attending the service. It also demonstrates it is an open event not secret.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

A wedding is an important event and should not be trivialised by the ceremony being held in "inappropriate" settings. If people want to cock a snoot at the formalities then maybe marriage is not for them.

It is not appropriate for this consultation to lead to a trivialising or privatising marriage so that it simply becomes whatever the couple want. If they so wish then they can have the formal marriage with the relevant "checks" etc. with the minimum "fuss" and then personalise the "reception/party" so it is whatever the couple choose.

Please share your views below:

There maybe occasions where this is necessary but the default position should be that the wedding ceremony has a proper solemnity and occasion: there is no reason why the aspect of the venue generally cannot be part of the reception etc.

If the concern is as to photo opportunities etc. then does that not, of itself demonstrate a very superficial approach to the service. If the argument is that the initial interview covers these important steps then it excludes friends and family from being a part of that important part of the process etc.

Consultation Question 49:

No

Please expand on your answer:

for reasons specified above

Consultation Question 50:

Other

Other

Other

Please expand on your answer:

There should be no compulsion one way or the other but each group identified should be able to turn down a request without having to give reasons: a couple to a civil wedding may hold views totally at odds with those of the religious organisation who own the venue so that would not be appropriate but otherwise I do not see a basic rationale for a prohibition.

Consultation Question 51:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This is far too open to abuse. It is fine as regards the reception AFTER the wedding but not for the ceremony itself.

Consultation Question 52:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

see my comments generally as regards venue above

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

I suggest that any such guidance have an objective not subjective approach - i.e. whilst it is the couple who are marrying, their choice should not be the final arbiter. If an officiant becomes known for being lax about this they could become the go to person and reduce the significance of what is being undertaken

Consultation Question 53:

Chapter 8: Registration

Consultation Question 54:

Please expand on your answer:

These details can be important as ways of enabling family trees and genealogy to be proved: I am aware of this having dealt with intestacies on death and with statutory wills.

Consultation Question 55:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

As these are important documents of record why not have both languages at the start: this will potentially save later cost.

Consultation Question 56:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Chapter 10: Validity and offences

Consultation Question 57:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

lack of capacity, sham and forced should also be automatically included.

On capacity, the level of capacity and understanding needs to be separately addressed. As marriage automatically revokes a will but the capacity to marry does not include understanding that a prior will is revoked is a lacuna that, when it applies, can cause expensive litigation and fractured families for a long time if not ever - typically pitting "step parent" against blood child who has lost out.

No

Please expand on your answer:

These are all important issues that can easily be avoided. If there is such a problem then it should be remediable - probably at the cost of the Officiant for not being duly diligent - a solicitor is typically liable in negligence in similar situations.

Consultation Question 58:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 59:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

but one that is rebuttable on the balance of probabilities

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

there needs to be clarity: inferring from conduct already has problems - e.g. living together for two years as man and wife immediately before death in order for a co-habitant to found an IPFDA 1975 claim.

Consultation Question 60:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

I have no knowledge of the cases cited in the consultation but the longer the marriage persists does it become more difficult to deal with finances as they get more entangled with wider family contributions as well and also to deal with children.

Consultation Question 61:

Yes

Chapter 13: The potential impact of our proposals

Consultation Question 85:

Please share your views below:

The changes should not add cost as that can be a deterrent as it is. Equally the changes should not in anyway trivialise the serious nature of the commitment being made - either by watering down the content, or making it a glorified photo opportunity.

It is important that all couples make the commitments in a serious manner. Many of the proposals about personalising the service will I fear lead to a trivialising of the occasion as well as making it more difficult, on any breakdown, to agree what was agreed/intended.

The party/reception can still be what the couple want.

It would be interesting to know how whether there is any correlation between the style and content of the initial ceremony and the length of marriage. Perhaps that research should be done.

Consultation Question 86:

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

There should be standard fees across the board so that one feels pressured into a marriage in a secular or religious setting against their beliefs etc.

Equally these should be set so that less well off couples do not feel excluded.

If there was a way of also dampening down on expectations of what is needed by way of numbers, reception etc. the better. I fear many are put off by the glamorous glitzy expensive weddings and receptions etc.

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

The danger of opening weddings to free enterprise as it were is that the true purpose and seriousness of what is being undertaken is overlooked etc. At this point it is not always what the couple want but what best provides a platform to ensure as few marriages founder as possible.

This goes back to my distinction between the ceremony and reception/party. The latter can be as frivolous/eccentric etc. as the couple can choose and afford. The ceremony is an entirely different matter.

The two must not be conflated.

I agree with the proposed duty, does not go far enough. Officiants should have a wider responsibility to ensure that the content and tone of the legal ceremony upholds the dignity and solemnity of marriage.

The proposals need to define what is meant by 'dignity' and 'solemnity'. The consultation seems to view ceremonies taking place "in the air" as being compatible with these tests, which suggests they are easy standards to reach.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

It should not be possible for someone to get married without being present at the wedding ceremony. Simply signing the marriage schedule is inadequate. Couples would be able to say anything they like or nothing at all. This is a major departure from the public declarations always considered foundational to the legal marriage ceremony.

This risks undermining the solemnity of the wedding ceremony and denying the seriousness of the commitment being made.

There is already a large amount of flexibility in the wedding ceremony. The prescribed words are minimal and couples can add to them in all sorts of ways.

It is not very much to ask that some specific phrases are used to show that both people freely consent to the lifetime commitment they are entering into.

The idea that a couple should be able to completely personalise their ceremony comes from a wrong view of marriage. A wedding is not just about the couple. The couple enter into a union which is understood by society and has been legally defined. So society and the law have an interest in the making of a public declaration. The logic of a wholly self-defined marriage ceremony is for marriage to be decoupled from the law and wider society. Marriage would become an entirely private matter, rather like a personal hobby

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

I would reiterate the seriousness and solemnity of a marriage ceremony. A particular ceremony should not just be allowed because the couple wants it, but because it is appropriate for such a significant event.

The idea that a couple should be able to choose everything about a wedding ceremony comes from a wrong view of marriage. A wedding is a public declaration in which society and the state have an interest.

Unofficial wedding ceremonies have included themes such as Alice in Wonderland, James Bond, Lord of the Rings, Game of Thrones, Marvel comics, Beauty and the Beast, Harry Potter, Star Wars and Flash Gordon. One had a 'Woodland Fairy themed ceremony with ponies dressed as unicorns' while another couple dressed as hedgehogs. It is very doubtful that many of these reflected how seriously marriage should be taken.

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The "open doors" requirement helps convey the public nature of wedding declarations. The open doors requirement was introduced hundreds of years ago as a protection against forced marriage. This is still a problem in our society. Removing this requirement encourages a false perception that marriage is a private matter without any public significance

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

I would like to reiterate the seriousness and solemnity of a marriage ceremony. Venues should not simply be allowed because marrying couples want them, but because they are appropriate places to hold such a significant ceremony.

There are some specific benefits in a wider variety of venues being allowed (for example churches who do not own their own building), but I would express caution that this should not legitimise inappropriate settings.

Unofficial wedding ceremonies have taken place in an S&M dungeon, underwater, and at a Comic Book convention with a couple dressed as comic book heroes. It would be completely incompatible with the dignity of marriage for venues like these to host legal weddings.

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Couples enter into marriage needing to make serious promises to each other and under these proposals there would not need to be anything said. It would become meaningless and casual. It would be highly personalised making it a private matter between the two people. The seriousness of the occasion made by serious legally-binding words would be lost.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

A legally-binding wedding is a serious matter and the ceremony should reflect this. The phrase 'does not undermine the dignity and solemnity of marriage' is too subjective. Driven by financial gain, the officiant could allow anything.

This could lead to unsuitable venues being chosen. How can dignity of marriage be protected if inappropriate venues are used? There needs to be clear definition in law of what is meant by "dignity and solemnity of marriage". These terms alone could easily be interpreted in a wide variety of ways.

The venue of the wedding and the vows that are made both have a profound impact on the dignity and solemnity of marriage, so should be included in any legal definition.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The proposal to reduce marriage to simple signature, like signing a cheque, greatly diminishes the dignity and solemnity of marriage. No-one should be able to marry someone else without even turning up for their own wedding! That shows a total failure to respect the magnitude of the occasion and the seriousness of the commitment being made by both parties.

If people are not even willing to be present at their own wedding, then they clearly show themselves unwilling to make the required effort to build a secure and happy marriage for the good of their spouse and any children they may have together.

There needs to be minimum legal requirements, as there are at present, in the vows made by those getting married to adequately reflect the seriousness of the commitments being made by both parties. There is already great flexibility to add to or personalise vows without removing these minimal legal requirements.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Marriage is a serious and solemn undertaking and to allow weddings to take any form imaginable totally contradicts this. It would encourage people to turn weddings into a joke or a stunt, rather than a serious, dignified and solemn occasion.

Please expand on your answer:

The requirement for weddings to take place with open doors reflects the public nature of marriage. it does not only affect those getting married, but two extended families are also joined together and the whole of society has a duty to respect their new marital status for the good of everyone.

If this requirement was removed, then forced marriages could take place more easily and protection from public scrutiny would be lost.

Chapter 7: Location

No

Please expand on your answer:

As already stated, the idea of having a wedding anywhere is contrary to the seriousness, solemnity of the occasion. Some increase of suitable venues could be justified, but a free for all is not.

Please share your views below:

The venue should be accessible to the public, since marriage affects society as well as those getting married. It should be a place of dignity, not frivolity, to reflect the seriousness and solemnity of the occasion.

Consultation Question 52:

Please expand on your answer:

The determination of what is safe and dignified should not be left to an individual officiant, which would result in a very subjective judgement on each occasion. Instead these vague terms need defining in law to protect the institution of marriage as a serious and solemn undertaking that should not be entered into lightly.

another period of time.

Please expand on your answer:

There needs to be a reasonable check on this: i) marriage should not be a spur of the moment decision like buying a TV, and even something like that has a 14 day cooling off period to ensure that you didn't make a mistake, and 2) there needs to be some possibility for the relevant authority to verify things. If 14 days is the consumer protection period there would seem to be some logic to this period.

What on earth would CPD mean in this context? What technical innovations occur in acting as a registrant? This would appear to be meaningless regulation.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This is a major departure from marriage vows as at present, which traditionally recognise that it is a covenant between 2 parties before a 3rd party. This requires a legal form of declaration to affirm this. It needs to be done publically, hence orally, unless there is a medical reason to prevent it.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

There appears to be no reason why the core event should not be according to a prescribed legal form to remind the couple that this is a serious legal commitment which they are committing to. There is a risk of trivialising the core element.

Consultation Question 44:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

This needs more detail to answer properly - appears to be lacking in thought as to the potential risks either way.

Consultation Question 45:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Why would you want religious elements in a civil ceremony - makes no sense. It would run the risk of becoming meaningless in its context and insulting to those who sincerely hold such views.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

It runs the risk of trivialising it.

Please share your views below:

The actual ceremony should be conducted in a suitable location, the reception can be conducted at whatever venue anyone likes so why is there a need to change this? It runs teh risk of trivialising a serious legal commitment.

Consultation Question 49:

No

Open access to a public event is necessary for safeguarding and becuae it is a public commitment.

Chapter 13: The potential impact of our proposals

Consultation Question 85:

Please share your views below:

These are the wrong questions- surely marriage is about commitment and therefore the law should be encouraging couples to think seriously about this such that their marriages endure. There is no point having more marriages if there is an increase in divorces equal to it. There is a vast weath of data that shows that marriage is good for society, but marriage that endures. To achieve this couples need to be aware of what they are doing and the long term commitment involved.

Consultation Question 3:

Please share your views below:

It has been ridiculous that weddings did not happen during Covid. We had to bring forward one wedding to the eve of Lockdown 2 (November) in order to allow a couple to get married with 8 people present. It would have been reasonable to restrict parties, but the wedding ceremony is important. People should be allowed to begin a marriage with a wedding ceremony, even if parties have to be postponed. The ban trivialised marriage to an optional extra and forced couples to live together without the value of the wedding ceremony as a moment of initial commitment.

Chapter 4: Preliminaries

Consultation Question 4:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Couples now come from different areas and the fact of residence in a particular area does not mean that they are known there. (The eighteenth century reason for the rule (connected with banns) is irrelevant today.

Consultation Question 5:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

While identity needs checking, an important feature must be the capacity to deliver. We are finding with the requirement of interviews for migrants that there are long delays in obtaining an appointment - the local registry office only holds them on one day in a week.

Consultation Question 6:

three days;

Please expand on your answer:

As long as identity has been checked, then other arrangements will have been made already

Consultation Question 7:

Please share your views below:

There will be advantages of online interviews. I would suggest that a witness to support the identity could be the officiant. In churches, we know the people we are marrying and have known them for some time.

Consultation Question 8:

Please share your views below:

Specifying "Commonwealth" countries is potentially discriminatory on grounds of race (similar to "patrial" status). The rule should at least apply to Ireland (the common travel area) and to other countries where there is a secure way of assessing identity, eg through a consulate.

Consultation Question 9:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Marriage is a public event and should be publicly known

Consultation Question 10:

Consultation Question 11:

Consultation Question 15:

Please share your views below:

Since people will rarely live in the parish, the banns should be published in the location of the residence of each of the parties to the wedding.

Consultation Question 16:

Please share your views below:

Certainly they should have power to require documents in the same way as a registrar. They should not be required, but may be permitted to meet separately if there is a good reason.

Consultation Question 17:

Please share your views below:

They should act separately. But they should be allowed to make the statement in the presence of each other.

Consultation Question 18:

Anglican preliminaries should continue to be recognised as legal preliminaries to weddings officiated by the Church of England and the Church in Wales;
or

Please expand on your answer:

We do not want to move to the French system where the civil marriage preliminaries are the sole recognised form of marriage

Chapter 5: Officiants

Consultation Question 19:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

The wedding is an official act and should be attended by someone authorised and responsible to a public body

Consultation Question 20:

No

Please expand on your answer:

It may be necessary for a registration officer to be called in to officiate at a church wedding, eg in the absence of a registered officiant

Consultation Question 21:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

The registration officer is a public official and can be trusted to behave responsibly

Consultation Question 22:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

This system has worked for years and there is no reason to change it

Consultation Question 23:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

The people entrusted with the role of officiant should be subject to some kind of scrutiny process and this seems sensible

Consultation Question 24:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

I am happy with this for humanists. There are difficulties for those with looser belief systems, but the state official is probably sufficient for them

Please share your views below:

Consultation Question 25:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

We do need some limits on what constitutes a religion and this is sensible

Consultation Question 26:

Please share your views below:

There is no need. There would be inherent power to reject a person who plans to act contrary to public policy. The only advantage of a rule here is to provide for a process by which a rejected person could appeal.

Consultation Question 27:

Please share your views below:

This would be helpful where the parish priest changes during the period between the interview and the wedding.

Consultation Question 28:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

It is proper that the Government has overall control of this system of officiants and ensures that they remain properly trained and of good behaviour

Consultation Question 29:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Provided the people are of appropriate standard and training, there is no reason why independents could not so act. They do very well in conducting funerals

Consultation Question 30:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

The state has to be assured that the people acting on its behalf are fit and proper persons and organisations should provide it with evidence that this is the case.

Consultation Question 31:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

initial and regular update training are essential

Consultation Question 32:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Humanist officiants at funerals do run as small businesses and do the job well. I see no reason why they should not do the same for weddings. It is a slur to suggest that running a business will necessarily mean they put profit before belief.

Consultation Question 33:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Regulated fees for the wedding service should be established. But there will also be extras for which an additional charge may be made.

Consultation Question 34:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

If people are acting because of a belief, they cannot act for contradictory beliefs as well!

Consultation Question 35:

Consultation Question 36:

It is essential to maintain the public character of the event.

Consultation Question 37:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

The organisation should act first, but then the state should monitor this

Consultation Question 38:

There should be an appropriate process, but this is essential for the state to maintain control over marriage

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

There is no other way of achieving control

Consultation Question 40:

No

Please expand on your answer:

It is better that there is a renewal period and a review of whether the officiant has undergone training. As ministers of religion, we have a regular review of our authority to celebrate other services and the same should be true for weddings

Consultation Question 41:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

It is essential that the officiant is up to date with procedures and requirements

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

The impediments question does belong in the preliminaries.

Consent is essential and it is proper that the formulation of that consent is verified. There is a question whether the consent should be in English (or Welsh). With migrant individuals settled in the UK but using religious rites in other languages (eg Russian Orthodox, Greek Orthodox and Syro-Malabar Catholics), it might be proper that the consent is expressed in a language other than English.

Consultation Question 43:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

As long as the essentials of the seriousness of marriage as a commitment and the appropriate solemnity of the occasion are recognised. But this is best achieved by guidance from the Registrar General

Consultation Question 44:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Restrictions should be a matter of religious practice

Consultation Question 45:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

It may be appropriate to have a religious blessing for people who cannot have a religious wedding (eg divorced Catholics). This would be a welcome innovation for these couples.

Please share your views below:

Any examples should be in guidance, not rules. An obvious form of religious content would be a blessing prayer.

Consultation Question 46:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

There should be no restriction on when a religious service takes place or what its content might be. We regularly have "convalidation" services even years after a civil wedding (eg one which took place in Saudi Arabia where Christian marriages were not permitted). So I see no reason for that practice not applying to the UK. Having a specific permission is unnecessary.

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

A wedding is a public event and so should be accessible to any member of the public (within reason).

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

As long as the ceremony fits within guidelines that make it appropriate as a solemn occasion, the venue should be flexible.

on inland waters such as lakes or rivers,, in the air, and/or, in private homes.

Please share your views below:

A venue should be public or accessible to the public during the ceremony, since it is a public act.

It might be appropriate to have a wedding on a boat where the solemn character of the commitment can be emphasised. But it is hard to conceive of a serious act done in the air eg in a balloon or bungee jump. Limitations should be in guidance, not law.

Consultation Question 49:

No

Please expand on your answer:

A wedding is a public act which confers a public status and so accessibility is an important safeguard for the character of the event. The party is obviously private, but the wedding is not.

Consultation Question 50:

Yes

No

No

Please expand on your answer:

Civil weddings are secular and should be kept as such. Religious or belief weddings may share venues in appropriate circumstances, and should be allowed to do so.

Consultation Question 51:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

It may be appropriate for the venue to be specified in the licence to marry and in publicity and for there to be an objection procedure to challenge the appropriateness of a venue.

Consultation Question 52:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Dignified simply means that it respects the solemn character of the commitment the individuals are undertaking

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Guidance is the best way of helping a decision to be reached

Consultation Question 53:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

This would avoid any challenge to a regular venue and be a safeguard for the investments a venue might put into being ready for weddings

Please share your views below:

The venue organiser should apply to the local Registrar setting out how they satisfy the requirements set out in guidance and the local Registrar should be allowed to approve after publication of the application and the absence of challenge. Any challenges should be resolved by the Registrar-General

Chapter 8: Registration

Consultation Question 54:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

The occupation should simply state "parent" without putting "mother" or "father". There are too many divorced or adoptive parents these days. So "parent" should be defined as the person occupying a parental role in a person's life, rather than being the biological father or mother of the child (who may not have seen them for years and may not wish to own them as part of the future relationship with their spouse).

Consultation Question 55:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Welsh should be fully respected (including in marriages in England)

Consultation Question 56:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Most activities now take place online and this would be an improvement on paper registers. But we also have to be able to cope with technical hitches! So a paper record should be kept at the same time until the officiant is satisfied that the electronic recording has actually occurred.

Chapter 10: Validity and offences

Consultation Question 57:

No

Please expand on your answer:

These are all formal invalidities. So 3 and 4 should be independent of the knowledge of the parties. Either the person was an officiant or she was not. If a person sat in the registrar's office and conducted a wedding, but was, in fact, the cleaner, the ceremony would be null and void. The same should apply to a person holding themselves out to be an officiant.

No

Please expand on your answer:

The presence of witnesses is important as evidence of consent. Items 1 and 3 should be capable of correction within an appropriate time and so only render the marriage voidable

Consultation Question 58:

No

Please expand on your answer:

For the reasons given above 1a stands on its own and 1b should not depend on knowledge, it is a formal bar in its own right and does not depend on knowledge.

Consultation Question 59:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Cohabitation is not always possible and the essence of marriage is consent and an intention to commit indefinitely to the other

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

There is no need for marriage by reputation in the modern world

Consultation Question 60:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

It should depend on a reasonable time to be examined in each case

Consultation Question 61:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

It is proper that a person should not hold out themselves as having authority which they do not have

Chapter 11: Special types of wedding

Consultation Question 62:

Please share your views below:

The key for the wedding of those who are terminally ill lies in getting a registrar. It would be good if the registrar could simply authorise a licensed officiant to conduct the ceremony once the registrar is satisfied that the conditions are met for this form of ceremony

Consultation Question 63:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

But the key is that the registration officer may need to go to the hospice, rather than relying on the couple attending the registrar's office. Online interview may be appropriate with a doctor in attendance.

Consultation Question 64:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Registrars are sufficiently competent in this matter

Consultation Question 65:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

This enables the couple to cope with treatment making it difficult to be precise about when a wedding could happen

Consultation Question 66:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Similar reasons to q. 65

Consultation Question 67:

Not Answered

Please expand on your answer:

The ability to attend remotely is recognised in other countries, eg Italy, so it should be recognised here. (What was good enough for [REDACTED] is good enough for the rest of us: marriage by proxy)

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

A sensible provision given the trouble we have had with Covid-19

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Risk of death is sufficient to justify departure from normal rules

Consultation Question 68:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

If a marriage in a boat is appropriate, then this is sensible

Consultation Question 69:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

This fits established custom

Consultation Question 70:

Please share your views below:

No view, other than that it should include Royal Navy vessels

Consultation Question 71:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The arrangement about the officiant is the safeguard of propriety and knowledge of process. If the designation were of a function ("captain of the ship") that would suffice, if the person is suitably instructed

Consultation Question 72:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes, the person should be authorised in advance

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 73:

Please share your views below:

If individuals are at sea for a long period of time, then marriage by chaplain would be appropriate, just as a funeral by a chaplain would be. An example would be crews who have been at sea for over 6 months in the recent pandemic

Consultation Question 74:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Chapter 12: Fees

Consultation Question 75:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Fees should not dissuade marriage

Consultation Question 76:

(2) a separate fee from other forms of giving notice, set nationally on compassionate grounds at below cost level.

Please expand on your answer:

Individuals in such circumstances are in a lot of financial as well as emotional stress and really need compassionate treatment

Consultation Question 77:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 78:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

The local authority should charge a fee to recover its reasonable costs. It is conferring a benefit on the venue

Consultation Question 79:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

As above, it is conferring a benefit on the venue and a reasonable charge should be made

Consultation Question 80:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

It is a significant inconvenience and it creates a lost opportunity to conduct other ceremonies during that time, creating a delay for other couples

Consultation Question 81:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 82:

No

Please expand on your answer:

For those in prison, there should be a lower fee, because they have no significant income. It is part of rehabilitation to establish enduring relationships outside prison.

Consultation Question 83:

(1) the fee should be set by regulation at a level below cost-recovery; or

Please expand on your answer:

There should perhaps be a means tested fee up to a low level. Some people will not be able to pay anything significant.

Consultation Question 84:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

A fixed fee seems the best way to ensure fairness

Chapter 13: The potential impact of our proposals

Consultation Question 85:

Please share your views below:

The costs and difficulties of conducting a ceremony are not major determinants of whether people marry. The potential arrival of children or death seems to be the dominant reason for deciding to get married. Poor experiences of parents' marriage is a reason for not getting married at all. None of the proposals will affect these dominant motives

Consultation Question 86:

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

Given the average cost of a wedding (now estimated at £10,000), the cost of officiants or being in places of worship is very small in the total budget. Convenience of getting married in a venue in which the reception will take place is probably a significant determinant in the choice of venue, not cost.

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

I doubt if the cost element is really significant

Consultation Question 87:

Consultation Question 89:

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

The present immigration aspects of marriage law have the following problems:

(1) those who are not UK citizens but are lawfully resident here are typically subjected to (a) a 70(not 28) day notice period which is an option for the Home Office to object, but is rarely taken up; and (b) the notice period runs only from the date of an interview and there are significant delays in some part of the country in having such an interview because resources do not allow the registrar to give over more than one day a week (so 4-6 interviews) to this task.

(2) immigration law imposes a minimum income on a UK citizen or resident to bring their spouse into the UK. This is a major deterrent or inconvenience for genuine marriages.

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

I see no great improvement, apart from the residence requirement being changed. The major obstacles lie with immigration law. But the resourcing of interviews for those giving notice when one part is not a UK citizen needs to be addressed.

Consultation Question 91:

Please share your views below:

There will be no significant increase in costs to religious organisations. There will be some (eg the cost of becoming an officiant and the cost of vetting premises), but these are reasonable.

Consultation Question 24:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Could lead to non marriages taking place

Please share your views below:

Far better not to propose this

Consultation Question 25:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Dangerous practices could ensue. Any group could meet together under any circumstances. What ill advised people are proposing these things

Consultation Question 26:

Please share your views below:

The law should not be able to to exclude religious organizations on the grounds that those organizations do not agree with any Government's liberal unbiblical ideologies.

Consultation Question 27:

Please share your views below:

No, it must be an individual who can be checked out.

Consultation Question 28:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Surely this is the present practice

Consultation Question 29:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This would be a dangerous path to go down

Consultation Question 30:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Authorized Persons need to be checked

Consultation Question 31:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Surely, as should be the case at present

Consultation Question 32:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Surely this does not require to be expanded.

Consultation Question 33:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

But how is this to be overseen?

Consultation Question 34:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Conducting marriage should not be business but part of an existing role

Consultation Question 35:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Marriage is a serious ceremony

Consultation Question 36:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

As at present - presumably!

Consultation Question 37:

No

Please expand on your answer:

There will no doubt be occasions when Officiants are 'slip shod' and inefficient and this will only come to light through Marriage Returns etc.

However this does not mean that an Officiant can be removed for refusing the officiate against their religious conscience.

Consultation Question 38:

No

Please expand on your answer:

See answer to '27' above.

Officiants holding to religious conscience should not be 'fined' 'prosecuted' or removed from office.

Consultation Question 39:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This would give the General Register Office officials the power to discriminate against Officiants with whose religious views they disagreed and allow these officials to promote their own liberal ideologies

Consultation Question 40:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The authorization surely goes with the post the person holds.

Consultation Question 41:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Does this mean if they fail to accept liberal ideologies? These questions sound rather manipulative

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

1. 'No impediment' should be expressed in the service, otherwise it makes a nonsense of it

2. The legal wording should be submitted

3. The signing of Wedding Registers should continue as at present

4. The marriage is legal after the signing of the Registers unless anything unforeseen should occur to prevent the signing, then the marriage would be deemed legal after the vows before witnesses had been made

As at present

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Not as chosen by the parties who are being influenced by T.V 'soap operas'

Consultation Question 44:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

If they all contain legal wording and signatures

Consultation Question 45:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Religious contact should be contained in civil ceremonies

Please share your views below:

Prayers, hymns etc.

Consultation Question 46:

No

Please expand on your answer:

It depends on a couple's reason for this and should not be dismissed out of hand

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Doors can be left unlocked, especially if someone genuinely needs to 'bring just cause'

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Weddings should take place in safe, and sensible places to reflect the seriousness or the occasion

Please share your views below:

Outdoors weddings need to be in confined areas

If on the water, what is to be the limitation of Registration area?

Not in the air as for reasons given above and would extend them,

Not in private homes as anything illegal could occur

Consultation Question 49:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This could lead to dangerous practice

Consultation Question 50:

No

Not Answered

Not Answered

Please expand on your answer:

Civil Weddings should not be allowed by the denomination or forced by Government

As already stated, religious elements should be allowed in civil ceremonies where the couple wish it. Why should a civil ceremony preclude the religious?

Consultation Question 51:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This would put undue pressure on the officiant

Consultation Question 52:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Marriage is a serious act

No

Please expand on your answer:

Officiants should not have to undertake such responsibility.

What would it do to their insurance premiums?

Consultation Question 53:

No

Please expand on your answer:

If the officiant is secular, they can simply refuse to officiate.

Please share your views below:

Don't entertain such a proposal!

Chapter 8: Registration

Consultation Question 54:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

The date of the wedding should be left as at present with the two month or so fluidity to allow for illness etc.

Surely the location is already required

Parents should not be able to identify by any other than their birth relationship.
However not only the father's name and details should be on the Certificate but the MOTHER'S ALSO

Consultation Question 55:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

This is not an easy question, what is the present practice ?

Consultation Question 56:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Why ?

Chapter 10: Validity and offences

Consultation Question 57:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Otherwise, in all cases the marriage would be legal

No

Please expand on your answer:

The marriage would be void. This proposal is dangerous and could lead to malpractice

Consultation Question 58:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

It is obviously so

Consultation Question 59:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This is to give legal credibility to immigration marriages

No

Please expand on your answer:

Co-habitation cannot be recognised as marriage when it so obviously is not marriage

Consultation Question 60:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Lack of consent cannot hold a time limit

Consultation Question 61:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

It must be so

Chapter 11: Special types of wedding

Consultation Question 62:

Please share your views below:

Where persons wishing to be married are doing so owing to health reasons, then present regulations must continue

Consultation Question 63:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

This must be done to ensure that there is no coercion involved

Consultation Question 64:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Continue as at present

Consultation Question 65:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This could be open to abuse

Consultation Question 66:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The situation for these categories should be bound by normal procedures

Consultation Question 67:

No

Please expand on your answer:

In the case of a national emergency, special legislation could be considered.

However marriage should not be carried out remotely as this is asking for malpractice

No

Please expand on your answer:

Each case should be considered individually and signed by a responsible independent person.

No

Please expand on your answer:

This is no evidence to support short circuiting proceedings.

Consultation Question 68:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Territorial sea does not define a Registration district

Consultation Question 69:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Only if the ship is a permanent fixture in the Registration District

Consultation Question 70:

Please share your views below:

Depending on its sea-worthiness, the vessel is immaterial, the Registration District is important

Consultation Question 71:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Not necessary if this not permitted

Consultation Question 72:

No

Please expand on your answer:

if this were to take place, then the chaplain or captain surely would be the obvious person

No

Please expand on your answer:

They should be under the law of the land

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Don't even consider it

Consultation Question 73:

Please share your views below:

Not come across any

Consultation Question 74:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This invites irresponsible legalities

Chapter 12: Fees

Consultation Question 75:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

If Officiants work with a Registration District any fee, if claimed, would be nominal

Consultation Question 76:

Not Answered

Please expand on your answer:

The fee surely would be the same as any other in the Registration District

Consultation Question 77:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Cannot see why it would need to change

Consultation Question 78:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

If a site has to be checked to make sure it is safe and dignified, it should not even be considered.

Far better to depict in advance those sites which are acceptable

Consultation Question 79:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Rate payers should not have to fund the perusal of sites. These sites should be obvious by reputation without any scrutiny

Consultation Question 80:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

If a fee is to be charge for travelling outside the office, then that is the responsibility of the wedding couple and should be based on mileage

Consultation Question 81:

No

Please expand on your answer:

No extras should be charged to rate payers

Consultation Question 82:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

This would have to be so

Consultation Question 83:

Not Answered

Please expand on your answer:

Without a doctors certificate, the regular fee would have to be charged.
Otherwise perhaps a reduced rate could be charged

Consultation Question 84:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Why should travelling costs be incurred ?

Chapter 13: The potential impact of our proposals

Consultation Question 85:

Please share your views below:

The current law has worked for many years, please adhere to it and do not belittle the seriousness of the marriage ceremony. Do not make marriage easier to undermine, easier to coerce or misuse

Consultation Question 86:

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

Couples choose where they wish to marry, it is up to them as to whether they are willing to pay for the privilege.

If, knowingly, a couple marry in non authorised premises, then they are breaking the law and the costs incurred should be the amount they pay in fines!

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

The availability of register office weddings should remain

If approved locations are listed, then there would be no question of costs incurred through visiting unlisted venues.

If a couple desire a two tier wedding, then they should be responsible for the cost

Consultation Question 87:

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it. We would also welcome any data on the size of businesses that are affected by the law or will be impacted under our proposed reforms. :

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it. We would also welcome any data on the size of businesses that are affected by the law or will be impacted under our proposed reforms. :

All sites must be Government approved.

As regards (4) is it thought that marriages will increase if they is made easier to achieve or more novel to undertake ? If marriages are made easier to achieve, then the door is open to malpractice. A couple genuinely wishing to marry, will do so under present regulations.

Consultation Question 88:

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

After officiating at numerous marriages and carrying out the legalities correctly so as to fulfill the purpose for which they are intended, I do not see any need to lessen the importance of the regulations.

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

Presumably these proposals will make more work for local authorities and cost the rate payers more money in order to provide services that are not necessary

Consultation Question 89:

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

Residents can already travel to other jurisdictions provided the legalities are performed

It should not be made easier for residents of overseas jurisdictions to travel to England and Wales to be married. Safeguards are necessary.

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

See answer to '89' above

Consultation Question 90:

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

Cruise ships owners would probably welcome it whilst maritime legislation (rather than the industry) could well suffer

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

See above answer

Consultation Question 91:

Please share your views below:

Unnecessary costs Coasts to Government and local authorities will fall on the rate payers
Businesses will always make profits out of weddings

Chapter 1: Introduction

Consultation Question 1:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

I conduct Humanist wedding ceremonies which are not legally recognised in England and Wales

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Couples are always made fully aware that their ceremony has no legal standing and they have to register the marriage separately, but they want to go ahead anyway because they want their ceremony to be more special and meaningful.

No

Consultation Question 2:

Please share your views below:

I wanted a celebrant led wedding so that it would be more personal and reflect our beliefs as humanists, but our venue had a wedding licence and it wasn't cost effective to pay for a registrar as well as a celebrant

Consultation Question 3:

Please share your views below:

All but one of my 2020 couples have postponed their weddings, which means they have had to postpone both their celebrant led ceremony as well as the legal registration which has meant double the logistics and replanning. Constant changes to guidelines mean that some have now postponed multiple times. The ability to be legally married outside without a fixed licensed structure would be helpful, even if numbers still needed to be lower than previously.

People should have the option of their ceremony being held in a meaningful place but also private and open only to those people they have invited.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes, although religious ceremonies should still be linked to their place of worship . Lots of people have a special place where they would love to get married but currently can't legally, and as Humanism is such a celebration of the natural world many humanist couples would like to get married in a beautiful scenic spot to recognise this

I suggest they would need to be in an English or Welsh registration district for a minimum of seven days but not necessarily the one where they propose to be married.

Consultation Question 5:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

An in-person interview would need to be within a maximum time scale. Say within two weeks of receipt of notice being received.

Consultation Question 6:

another period of time.

Please expand on your answer:

Time for reflection is needed. I suggest one month.

Consultation Question 7:

Please share your views below:

I consider there are far too many risks associated with interviews being conducted remotely.

Consultation Question 8:

Please share your views below:

I consider this should still be possible.

Consultation Question 9:

No

Please expand on your answer:

At first glance this may seem reasonable but it would enable those with vested interests and /or criminal intent (e.g. burglary) to exploit the couple for financial gain or to pursue religious persecution.

Consultation Question 10:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Discretion should be given to Registrars in approved circumstances

Consultation Question 11:

Yes both of the couple to attend but at separate times to avoid any cases of intimidation by their prospective marriage partner.

Consultation Question 18:

all weddings should be preceded by civil preliminaries.

Please expand on your answer:

This appears to provide a uniform approach to weddings.

Chapter 5: Officiants

Consultation Question 19:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

I submit the officiant should always be a licensed registrar.

Consultation Question 20:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Not sure what is meant by this. If the reference is to weddings of service personnel based in the U.K. then the situation needs further discussion.

Consultation Question 21:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

So long as they are qualified , yes. Why add extra expense to an expensive day.

Consultation Question 22:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Not unless they are recognised as approved government registrars.

Consultation Question 23:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This risks devaluing the societal importance of marriage. For the sake of children marriage needs to be fully respected as a life long commitment between the couple. Officiants need to be fully trained, legally appointed registrars whose position is acknowledged throughout society as a whole.

Consultation Question 24:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The definition quoted is far too vague and open to moral questioning. We are fallible human beings who must answer to a higher authority for our actions. Humankind needs hope and has to seek guidance. Love must rule the world to ensure forgiveness, peace and justice; the secular world can never provide this.

Please share your views below:

No list. This would give rise to endless disputes and further undermine marriage as an institution. Marriage needs to be closely defined for society's well being.

Consultation Question 25:

No

Please expand on your answer:

1) Only officially recognised registrars, not 'officiants' and 2) not non-religious organisations.

Consultation Question 35:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

We need a definition of the marriage ceremony. Where should it take place? There have to be strict, enforceable guidelines in place, since in contemporary society there are far too many 'party time' ceremonies which fail to recognise what should be a serious, committed and life-long commitment between the two partners. Anyone looking at the latest figures for marriage breakups would realise this. Many children are now being cared for by struggling single parents, a situation only compounded by Covid 19.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This is far too loose. Both partners must be present at the wedding ceremony and express their wish to be married to one another. The proposals would further devalue marriage which is such a highly important element of a caring, civilised society.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Definitely No! We have far too many examples of marriage not being taken seriously.
A case of 'Let's make up our own rules' Irresponsible, immature and dangerous

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Forced marriages are sadly a fact of today's multicultural society. Open doors can help prevent this and protect the innocent. A marriage should be an open statement between two people who truly want to spend the rest of their lives together.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

A total nonsense! Where is the dignified and safe commitment in this proposal. Appropriate buildings must be clearly designated.

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

What is the point of a wedding ceremony which doesn't require the parties to express their consent to marry each other using a universally recognized form of words at the ceremony itself? If the formation of a marriage depends solely on the signing of a document, irrespective of whether or not that takes place at the wedding ceremony, it takes away from the solemnity of the marriage and trivializes it.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

There should at least be a basic form of words which encapsulates and expresses the solemn nature of marriage and ensures that there is a common standard of commitment. Parties could then be free to expand on those words if they wish to, provided that any additions are consistent with the basic form of words.

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Marriage is not solely a private matter between the parties concerned. Every marriage has an impact on society, and the wedding ceremony should therefore in principle be open to the public. Also, being open to the public is a safeguard against forced marriage.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Venues for wedding ceremonies should be universally recognized as reflecting the dignity and solemnity of marriage.

outdoors,, on inland waters such as lakes or rivers,, in the air, and/or, in private homes.

Consultation Question 2:

Please share your views below:

This does not apply to me, as my marriage had no legal barriers.

Consultation Question 3:

Please share your views below:

I have no personal experience but know couples who had to postpone their weddings due to Covid-19.

Chapter 4: Preliminaries

Consultation Question 4:

No

Please expand on your answer:

It is important that couples are resident in England or Wales for a longer period than seven days.

Consultation Question 5:

No

Please expand on your answer:

I am concerned at the possibility for fraud by notice not being given in person in all cases.

Consultation Question 6:

another period of time.

Please expand on your answer:

A minimum of fourteen days, except in exceptional circumstances, such as one party being terminally ill.

Consultation Question 7:

Please share your views below:

It should definitely not be possible for any interview to take place remotely. There are too many opportunities for fraud and "sham" marriages.

Consultation Question 8:

Please share your views below:

I agree with the current position about this.

Consultation Question 9:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 10:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 11:

No

Please expand on your answer:

In a religious marriage, it is not always possible to know in advance the name of the celebrant. Similarly in a marriage in a Register Office, the couple might not know who will actually officiate at their marriage.

Consultation Question 12:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

However, I do not think that the name of the celebrant / officiant is an essential matter that needs to be set out in advance.

Please share your views below:

Consultation Question 13:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

The banns should be published in the jurisdiction where the marriage will take place.

Consultation Question 14:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

These rules are really no longer relevant.

Consultation Question 15:

Please share your views below:

I agree with this proposal.

Consultation Question 16:

Please share your views below:

I agree that the clergy should meet each of the couple separately to ensure that there is no duress. They should also be entitled to call for whatever documentary evidence they consider necessary, particularly to confirm that neither party is in a subsisting valid marriage/ civil partnership and that, if either party has been married previously, he/she has a divorce decree or a decree dissolving a civil partnership.

Consultation Question 17:

Please share your views below:

I agree with this proposal.

Consultation Question 18:

all weddings should be preceded by civil preliminaries.

Please expand on your answer:

I think that it would be useful to have a separate civil preliminary for all weddings, followed by the religious marriage.

Chapter 5: Officiants

Consultation Question 19:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

It is extremely important that it is clear to the parties to the marriage that marriage has legal requirements.

Consultation Question 20:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

it is important that religious weddings are carried out by a member of that religion and that registration officers play no part in the religious part of a religious wedding.

Consultation Question 21:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

I see no need for more than one.

Consultation Question 22:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

There is no reason to change this,

Consultation Question 23:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 24:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

I agree, subject to the caveat that there should be a preliminary civil ceremony.

Please share your views below:

This is a matter to be decided by Parliament.

Consultation Question 25:

No

Please expand on your answer:

An organisation with only 20 members should not be so entitled. I would suggest that the organisation should have at least 200 members in order to prevent "sham" organisations being set up to enable a particular marriage to take place where the so-called organisation is not a bona fide one.

Consultation Question 26:

Please share your views below:

Any organisation promoting unlawful purposes or purposes that are contrary to public policy should be expressly excluded from playing any role in a marriage.

Consultation Question 27:

Please share your views below:

I agree that it would be sensible for religious organisations, and others if so enabled, to nominate an officiant by office. If those nominated are restricted to named individuals, there would be a problem if a named individual was transferred to another parish.

Consultation Question 28:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

I agree.

Consultation Question 29:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

I do not agree that independent officiants should be entitled to officiate at a marriage.

Marriage is an important legal ceremony with legal consequences and it is important that a marriage cannot be officiated at by any Tom, Dick or Harry.

The officiant at a marriage should be either a member of a religious organisation or non-religious belief organisation or a registrar. There should be no entitlement for any independent person.

Consultation Question 30:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

However, I would hope that all nominated officiants are indeed fit and proper persons.

Consultation Question 31:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

I do not support independent officiants being permitted to play a role in a marriage.

Consultation Question 32:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 33:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

As I have said already, I do not support allowing independent officiants to play any role in a marriage ceremony.

Consultation Question 34:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 35:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

However, I think that this applies only to officiants from religious organisations and non-religious belief organisations and of course to registrars.

I do not think that independent officiants will be able to carry out the role with the dignity and solemnity that it requires. Being an officiant will turn into a money-making exercise by unscrupulous individuals advertising their particular "skills" to conduct a marriage ceremony. The whole subject would become very tawdry.

Consultation Question 36:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

But again I am strongly opposed to any independent individuals being permitted to be officiants.

Consultation Question 37:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The GRO must have an overriding responsibility for this.

Consultation Question 38:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

This is very important, as a particular organisation might turn a blind eye to the shortcomings of a member of its organisation.

Consultation Question 39:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

I do not support independent officiants playing any role but, if they are permitted to play a role, it is essential that the GRO can monitor them and de-authorise them where appropriate.

Consultation Question 40:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 41:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

But I would not want them to be able to officiate in the first place.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

I very strongly want the current words to be part of any marriage ceremony and for them to be spoken orally.

Parliament must legislate for the manner in which those who cannot speak can express their consent to the marriage and no doubt there is legislation already in place dealing with this.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The words of consent should continue as at present. The parties can add other aspects to the ceremony but the present words for consent should continue.

Consultation Question 44:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Subject to the words of consent remaining as they are at present.

Consultation Question 45:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Please share your views below:

I think that this is a matter for the parties to the marriage to decide. However, if there is to be religious content, I do not see why a couple would not choose to have a religious ceremony instead of a civil ceremony, unless there is an impediment to prevent a religious ceremony, such as a divorced Anglican or Roman Catholic not being allowed to re-marry.

Consultation Question 46:

No

Please expand on your answer:

I think that it would clarify the difference between a civil ceremony and a religious ceremony if all marriages had to have a civil ceremony first, with the couple deciding whether or not to have a religious ceremony afterwards. This is the position in most of continental Europe.

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

It is important that all weddings take place with open doors or with public access.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Weddings should continue to be legally permitted to take place in religious buildings, Registrars' offices and other places licensed to hold weddings.

It would be outrageous for a wedding to be legally permitted to take place "anywhere". This would totally undermine the legal status of marriage.

Please share your views below:

I do not think that any of the four suggested venues should be permitted to hold weddings, with or without limitations.

Consultation Question 49:

No

Please expand on your answer:

If a venue is licensed to hold a wedding, it must be available to all.

Consultation Question 50:

Yes

Yes

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 51:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Allowing this would lead to unscrupulous individuals promoting particular venues, probably for reward from the venue owner. The present provisions for licensing a venue must continue.

Consultation Question 52:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

I do not think that an officiant should be entitled to approve a venue.

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Officiants should play no role in approving a venue.

Consultation Question 53:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

There should only be a licensing system in place to approve locations that frequently host weddings. Other venues should have to apply to be licensed on an ad hoc basis.

The officiant should play no role in this.

Please share your views below:

The current licensing process should continue.

Chapter 8: Registration

Consultation Question 54:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

The current procedure of issuing a marriage certificate / civil partnership certificate after the ceremony should continue with the information on the certificate being as at present.

Consultation Question 55:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

I have no strong views on this.

Consultation Question 56:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Definitely not.

I sincerely hope that it is not intended to introduce electronic registration for births or deaths too.

Electronic registration would be a step too far.

Chapter 10: Validity and offences

Consultation Question 57:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

No

Please expand on your answer:

It is essential that the parties to the marriage sign the register if they are physically able to do so.

It is also essential that it continues to be a requirement that there must be two witnesses to a marriage.

A mistake in the document should be capable of rectification and should not in itself render the marriage void but a failure in either of the other two factors should render it void.

Consultation Question 58:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 59:

No

Please expand on your answer:

I think that it is important the the couple have cohabited after the marriage. Otherwise the marriage could be a sham.

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

The current position leads to all kinds of confusion, with members of the public thinking that there is such a thing as a "common" law wife or husband. This leads to succession problems. The presumption should be abolished as it serves no useful purpose and leads to confusion.

If there is any doubt about the validity of a marriage, the couple should simply go to a register office with two witnesses to marry legally.

Consultation Question 60:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The lack of consent is a matter for the Courts to decide. There should not be a time limit.

Often the lack of consent is due to duress, either from the other party to the marriage or from a parent, A time limit would be unfair to the party who did not consent.

Consultation Question 61:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

It is for reasons like this that I am strongly against allowing lay individuals to be entitled to apply to be officiants.

Chapter 11: Special types of wedding

Consultation Question 62:

Please share your views below:

This is a matter for Parliament.

Persons who have a terminal illness should be entitled to apply for a shorter notice period.

Consultation Question 63:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 64:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 65:

No

Please expand on your answer:

It should be the same validity period as a schedule issued to any other person. A terminally ill person is more likely to want to get married sooner rather than later.

Consultation Question 66:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Again, it should be the same period as for anyone else.

Consultation Question 67:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

1. I agree with this extension.
2. Except in extreme circumstances, it should not be possible for the civil preliminaries to take place remotely.
3. It is entirely ridiculous that a couple should be entitled to marry remotely.
4. All parties should sign the same document.

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 68:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This too would be a step too far. A wedding should take place on land and in a building.

Consultation Question 69:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This too is a step too far. A wedding should take place only in a building on land.

Consultation Question 70:

Please share your views below:

Definitely not.

Marriage is a solemn ceremony with legal consequences and it should not be allowed for a marriage to take place "just anywhere", which completely takes away from the solemnity of the ceremony.

Consultation Question 71:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

I do not believe that couples should be permitted to marry in international waters.

Consultation Question 72:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

I strongly oppose weddings on ships in international waters.

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Again, I do not agree that such marriages should be permitted.

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Again, such weddings should not be permitted at all.

Consultation Question 73:

Please share your views below:

I have never heard of any such demand.

Consultation Question 74:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Again, such weddings should not be permitted to take place. To allow them would undermine the solemnity of the marriage ceremony.

Chapter 12: Fees

Consultation Question 75:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 76:

(2) a separate fee from other forms of giving notice, set nationally on compassionate grounds at below cost level.

Please expand on your answer:

Such individuals should be treated compassionately.

Consultation Question 77:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

The current practice is fine.

Consultation Question 78:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

This is a sensible proposal.

Consultation Question 79:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

This is sensible.

Consultation Question 80:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

It is important that weddings are carried out by a registration officer when it is not a religious or non-religious belief-holding wedding. In consequence the Local Authority should be entitled to charge for the officer's time.

Consultation Question 81:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Again, this is sensible.

Consultation Question 82:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 83:

(1) the fee should be set by regulation at a level below cost-recovery; or

Please expand on your answer:

I have no strong views on this but agree that some element of compassion should apply to reduce the fee or perhaps eliminate it all together.

Consultation Question 84:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

I am not in favour of officiants being authorised to carry out a wedding ceremony.

If they are to be authorised, the Registrar General should prescribe the fee for such authorisation, set to recover the costs of assessing the application.

Chapter 13: The potential impact of our proposals

Consultation Question 85:

Please share your views below:

I think that the current law works well and does not need to be amended.

1. I do not believe that the current law discourages couples from getting married.
2. I do not believe that the Commission's provisional proposals will lead to an increase in the number of couples marrying legally.

Consultation Question 86:

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

I think that the current law works well.

With regard to no 5 above, it is essential that every couple who marries has a separate, legally recognised wedding.

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

The current law works well.

Consultation Question 87:

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it. We would also welcome any data on the size of businesses that are affected by the law or will be impacted under our proposed reforms. :

The current law works well.

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it. We would also welcome any data on the size of businesses that are affected by the law or will be impacted under our proposed reforms. :

1. All venues should be approved formally by a registration officer.
2. It would be good for registration officers to be available to officiate at a wedding, to avoid the need for any independent officiants being permitted.

With regard to 3 and 4, I do not think that the ability of a venue to host a wedding or the business opportunities available to a venue play any role in the licensing of venues for weddings.

Marriage is a solemn ceremony and a deep commitment by the couple and the benefit to the venue is not relevant.

Consultation Question 88:

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

I have no knowledge of this impact.

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

It is important that Local Authorities play a role in marriage and wedding, as they do at present.

Consultation Question 89:

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

1. I do not think that residents of England and Wales should be permitted to travel elsewhere to get married but I know that it happens. It is important that the necessary formalities are followed in England and Wales, so that a wedding overseas is legally recognised in England and Wales.

2. I am strongly opposed to residents of overseas jurisdictions travelling to England and Wales to get married. As a solicitor, I am aware that such marriages are often not recognised by the country in which they are resident, which leads to major problems, so such marriages should not be allowed to take place here.

There should obviously be special provisions in relation to Scotland and Northern Ireland, ie when residents of England and Wales want to get married in either Scotland or Northern Ireland or vice versa.

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

What I said above applies here too. However, as I have said already, I do not approve of weddings being able to take place on ships.

Consultation Question 90:

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

I have no evidence about this but strongly object to weddings being able to take place on ships.

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

As I said above applies here too.

The benefits to the UK ship register and maritime industry should be irrelevant in relation to marriages.

Consultation Question 91:

Please share your views below:

I am not sufficiently aware of the costs involved to be able to comment meaningfully on this.

A personal interview is essential to ratify the authenticity of the lawful process of Marriage.

Consultation Question 6:

another period of time.

Please expand on your answer:

A specified time for proper preparation and investigation on legal grounds would be at least 4 weeks. This would mean enquiries could be made properly, either by banns, certificate special license or Bishops licence.

Consultation Question 7:

Please share your views below:

At least one face to face with both parties needs to be made and both parties sign a declaration of details in the presence of an authorised person so that any coercion might be identified and details agreed by both parties.

Consultation Question 8:

Please share your views below:

Yes so that probity might be established.

Consultation Question 9:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

who would decide the risk of harm? Is this a step toward eradicating any check or balance on the institution of Marriage.

This could lead to a very private affair when Marriage is a Public Declaration of commitment of one man to one woman in a life long relationship within the local community. Marriage is supposed to be a strengthening of community.

Consultation Question 10:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

A Lot can happen in 12 months. A shorter period would be more effective. The three months as it is now would be as good.

Consultation Question 11:

No

Officiants are already authorised and certified celebrants who may have problems in fulfilling the occasion but would have an agreeable alternative for the place of Celebration.

Consultation Question 12:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Not imposed by Government nor the couple but agreed by all.

Please share your views below:

Not without consultation and agreement by couple and place of celebration.

Consultation Question 13:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Banns read in the home parish of one of the couples where ever that may be reinforces the community aspect of Marriage. It is a means by which at least some check on the legality of the union is made.

Consultation Question 14:

Not Answered

Yes to both if there is a hint of possibility of coercion or malpractice.

Consultation Question 17:

Please share your views below:

Yes a public statement is for the good of them as individuals, as a couple and for the community into which they will play their part.
A private declaration is good but a public declaration is essential.

Consultation Question 18:

Anglican preliminaries should continue to be recognised as legal preliminaries to weddings officiated by the Church of England and the Church in Wales;
or

Please expand on your answer:

Anglican preliminaries are considered legal by act of Parliament and should be seen as base line. Civil preliminaries seem to be less stringent.
The Act of Marriage should be strengthened not eroded.

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

The solemnity and value of the ceremony culturally and community wise must come before profit. Hotels should not be allowed to organise and officiate weddings on their own. Community is excluded.

Consultation Question 33:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

There should not be independents.

Consultation Question 34:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

If they are nominated by a religious or non religious organisation they cannot be independent.

Consultation Question 35:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

The 'Dignity and solemnity' of marriage must be by the Celebrant and the whole process of marriage and the place and process of the event. There needs to be a definition of 'dignity' and 'solemnity'.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

A person cannot be married if they are not present at the ceremony. A simple signature is not enough. It is a public declaration of intent to commit their lives to each other.

A defined set of declarations protect the couple and society and strengthen both. Making it up or saying nothing invalidates the whole reason for doing it. They might as well continue to live with each other as before.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Marriage is a community event and so making up your own takes away from the seriousness and solemnity as well as the continuity of the process and event.

Secular themed weddings detract from the seriousness and solemnity of the occasion.

Consultation Question 44:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Status quo

Consultation Question 45:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Why not.

Please share your views below:

Might as well have a church wedding.

The Civil ceremonies I have been to, seem to want to include religious content but without naming the God of Love.

Consultation Question 46:

No

Please expand on your answer:

There may be a need for a civil ceremony for legal reasons but wanting a religious service as well should not be prevented.

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The ceremony is Public and community so it protects against forced marriage. Even today this is a problem in some places.

Marriage is a public not private matter.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Marriage is a significant event and should be held in an appropriate place and not somewhere the couple want. It is a community event.

Please share your views below:

Non of these because they not special for a special purpose.

Marriage is special.

Consultation Question 49:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Civil ceremonies should be public and special.

Consultation Question 50:

Other

Other

Other

Please expand on your answer:

If a couple want a civil wedding then they can choose to go to the local recognised civil venue. Why would they want to have their ceremony in a Faith venue.

A couple who want a faith based ceremony would not want to go to a non faith based centre.

Consultation Question 51:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This should be a community responsibility, which some councils have abdicated.

There is a need for a community based decision about Wedding venues as it is a community event, faith community or secular community.

Consultation Question 52:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

This is woolly. What is safe and dignified apart from what is now offered in Faith community buildings or Civic centres.

Other

Please expand on your answer:

What is safe and dignified. Individuals can have very different ideas. Set places are more community and defined.

Chapter 13: The potential impact of our proposals

Consultation Question 85:

Please share your views below:

The present law does not prevent couples getting married particularly if faith communities provide the service at cost or below.

Doubt whether the provisional proposals would make much difference to numbers considered legally married.

Consultation Question 86:

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

some couples prefer a registry office ceremony. Usually done simply but well.

Approved other premises will throw up other issues- cost would be commercial.

The cost of marrying in a registered place of worship are well known, but vary by denominations and vision for the institution of Marriage of one man and one woman for life.

There is little need for any other alternates if you want to maintain the safety, seriousness and solemnity. Hopefully a once in a life time event so should be special and meaningful.

Please share your views below. If you have any evidence to support your answers, or which might help us assess the extent of possible benefits, please provide it.:

Register office ceremonies are known to be simple and reasonable.

Other sites including outdoors should not be advocated.

Some faith groups advocate a civil ceremony for the legal aspects and then provide a free service of a spiritual nature to follow to demonstrate and teach the true nature of Marriage as the Bible indicates.

Consultation Question 87:

Civic centres and faith establishments should be the normal places for weddings.

More money is spent on the wedding dress and the reception than the ceremony itself so business opportunities should be a by product and accessory to the ceremony.

Consultation Question 4:

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 5:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This would make it easier for people to be forced into a marriage without their consent.

Consultation Question 6:

another period of time.

Please expand on your answer:

There must be time, at least a few weeks, for any who object on good grounds to the marriage to know of the proposal and to address it. A few days notice smacks of a 'shot-gun' wedding tactic that means people rush into marriage without due time to approach it with full consent and deliberation.

Consultation Question 7:

Please share your views below:

No, especially considering such examples you have given, there should be face to face interviews lest the marriage candidate is being coerced into it. This offers little protection to those with little enough protection as it is.

Consultation Question 8:

Please share your views below:

Pardon? What is a relevant national? Shouldn't notice be given wherever notice is relevant to the couple getting married? Why is Scotland considered separately from England and Wales?

Consultation Question 9:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Possibly, but who decides whether or not it would expose either to harm and how would it be advertised to those who do not use the Internet - why discriminate against them? Registry offices and their delegated authorities should be used.

Consultation Question 10:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Not sure what you mean by schedule.

Consultation Question 11:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The officiant and any substitute officiant should be a qualified, state appointed, marriage registrar.

Yes if that person is a qualified registrar.

Please share your views below:

Pardon? What does that mean?

Consultation Question 13:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 20:

Consultation Question 23:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

As long as whoever officiates is a state qualified marriage registrar, so not just anyone who fancies officiating for the day. Marriage is a serious commitment and should be treated with respect and conducted with dignity.

Consultation Question 24:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Too wide a description. Could be approving anything.

Please share your views below:

No, I think it must be state registrar or delegated church officiant.

Consultation Question 25:

Consultation Question 26:

Please share your views below:

No should not exclude religious organisations. Should always exclude anyone who promotes purposes that are unlawful etc.

Consultation Question 27:

Please share your views below:

Another vague question. Honestly. Yes religious organisations should be able to nominate officiants otherwise marriage should be conducted by a state qualified registrar.

Consultation Question 28:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Of course the General Register Office should keep such oversight but see former answers because I don't think non-religious marriages should be conducted by anyone other than a state qualified registrar.

Consultation Question 29:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 30:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

But I don't believe non-religious marriages should be conducted by anyone other than a state qualified registrar. This is the sort of thing Mao did - make an unqualified person a surgeon because it is elitist to have the education and qualifications of a bona fide surgeon. Pity the patient, or in this case pity the marriage and the stability of society in general, children in particular.

Consultation Question 31:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Absolutely not. They should be state qualified registrars.

Officiants should be registrars or clergy with delegated responsibility for registering marriage.

Consultation Question 37:

Please expand on your answer:

The General Register Office should be the monitoring body.

Consultation Question 38:

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 39:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 40:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Officiants should be authorised by their status as qualified registrars or delegated clergy.

Consultation Question 41:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Don't believe in independent officiants. One has a strong feeling that you have already decided on the course of changes with or without this consultation. If a person fails to comply with such obligations in any walk of life they should have their authorisation removed. This is a really silly question.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

People should stand in front of witnesses and declare that they enter the marriage freely and without impediment.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Depending on the people and the officiant the marriage could take place in venues that do not uphold the dignity and solemnity of such a contract but pander to whim and whimsy. The venues must be approved by representatives of the General Registry Office if the marriages held there are to be endorsed by the state.

Consultation Question 44:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Religious groups take marriage very seriously and have done so for a long duration, Jews for thousand of years, the Anglicans and Quakers for hundreds. This is a very limited list, and I would prefer a more inclusive 'Christian' for Anglicans and all the Christian denominations you have excluded.

Consultation Question 45:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Wholeheartedly yes.

Please share your views below:

Religious content means anything to do with God and his love for us. No limits necessary.

Consultation Question 46:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Why would you not want to allow a religious ceremony?

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Absolutely no. 'Open doors' requirement provides protection for those who may be coerced into marriage, acknowledges the importance of marriage in our society and maintains it as a cause of public concern and celebration.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

I would like to think that this question answers itself negatively. Any place makes a mockery of the solemnity of the occasion: could be a merry-go-round etc. Please, the venue should be approved by the General Register Office as one suitable to the dignity of the occasion.

outdoors,, on inland waters such as lakes or rivers,, in the air, and/or, in private homes.

Please share your views below:

Yes. It needs to be a place that is suitable to the occasion and can be accessed by the public, and certainly not in private homes behind closed doors or in frivolous outdoor spaces. This proposal sounds like Hollywood.

Consultation Question 49:

No

Please expand on your answer:

People need to be protected from forced marriages and marriage is a matter of public interest and state approval. It would make marriage an activity without any solemnity at all.

Consultation Question 50:

No

Other

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

I don't believe anyone except a qualified registrar or a delegated member of religious clergy should conduct a wedding authorised by the state. I do not believe our state should stop religious weddings but accept that a civil wedding may also be required if it is to be recognised by the state. Why would anyone want to hold a non-religious wedding in a religious venue but why would you want to stop them if they did?

Consultation Question 51:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Could be anywhere unsuitable especially if the officiant comes under pressure from those requesting the marriage. The General Register Office should approve locations not the officiant even if that person is a state registrar.

Consultation Question 52:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The General Register Office should ensure such things. The best locations for a civil service are already available in the local register offices. Receptions can be as whimsical as they like afterwards.

No

Please expand on your answer:

The General Register Office should decide not the officiant.

Consultation Question 53:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The General Register Office should approve the location.

Please share your views below:

Whatever is decided, the General Register Office should be responsible and the best place for the ceremony would be the local register office followed by whatever sort of reception, wherever and however the marriage party chooses.

Chapter 8: Registration

Consultation Question 54:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Consultation Question 55:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Always both languages for those who only read one of them.

Consultation Question 56:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Both forms would do, but electronic registration alone is open to fraud.

Chapter 10: Validity and offences

Consultation Question 57:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

These things should never happen and would be less likely to happen if all marriages were conducted by a state qualified registrar or delegated member of the clergy.

No

Please expand on your answer:

No marriage should go ahead in the first instance without witnesses, signed documents and registration.

Consultation Question 58:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

But again, should not happen with a registrar officiating.

Consultation Question 59:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Depends. If there was coercion or an unqualified officiant or for other reasons , each case you be examined to decide whether or not the marriage was valid.

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

Marriage is serious and should be an activity properly undertaken and recognised, and indeed encouraged, by the state and supported by society, not just a casual relationship.

Consultation Question 60:

Other

Please expand on your answer:

Yes but every case should be examined and this again highlights the need for witnesses,' open doors' policy for the ceremony and full time beforehand for the marriage candidates to prepare and withdraw if necessary.

Consultation Question 61:

Yes

Please expand on your answer:

In and of itself this proposal does not go far enough. Of course the officiant should have responsibility for upholding the dignity and solemnity of marriage in general, but specifically, should insist on conducting a dignified and solemn procedure in the case of each and every marriage ceremony at which he/she officiates. Thus he or she will be responsible for the tone and content of the liturgy recited, as well as the demeanour of the bride, groom, and guests during the legal part of the proceedings.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Here are the very things which could seriously undermine the solemnity of the ceremony and indeed, deny that a serious commitment is being made. Since marriage is a public proclamation being made by two parties, each to the other, it is important that they appear together. Simply substituting a signed schedule fundamentally destabilizes a marriage commitment and may even beg the question of whether both parties were giving their assent freely and without coercion!

The public declaration also affirms the nature and purpose of the marriage ceremony which should be both visible to society and binding at law. The few formal words of betrothal currently in use can certainly be added to, according to individual taste, but should not be dispensed with if the true meaning of marriage is to be upheld.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This proposal emphasizes the fundamental flaw exposed in Question 43 above; since both state and society have a vested interest in the commitment made at a marriage ceremony giving carte blanche to the couple to appear in whatever disguise they choose, and utter whatever words appeal to them, simply does not guarantee either solemnity or the dignity of the occasion. Let there be no confusion over what is pantomime and what is a serious commitment to a life long union.

Please expand on your answer:

Having been introduced centuries ago to discourage forced marriage - a blight on society even today - an open doors policy for marriage should be strongly maintained. Again, should this proposal be implemented, marriage as a public declaration would be significantly undermined.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Once again 'seriousness' and 'solemnity' could be put at risk should this proposal be placed on the statute books. While there may be some leeway for an extension of premises licensed to hold weddings, 'appropriate location' is the key here.

'Safe and dignified' are quite slippery terms, what might be considered safe by a practitioner in extreme sport might not be regarded so by one who is risk averse. So it would be necessary to state exactly what is being defined by these terms. You might argue that if the entire ceremony, with all the invited guests being extreme sports enthusiasts, where would the harm be in holding the ceremony on a precipitous slope, but would this constitute a public wedding?

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Marriage is a significant legal commitment to each other, using your own words could well make marriage less significant than it rightly is. There is a great deal of freedom within the proposals for many different types of marriage ceremony to take place, why can't the 'prescribed words' fit in to all these ceremonies? Having your own words and not words that all those getting married say is making out that marriage is a private act, not a public legal one.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

'Expression of consent'

It should not be possible for someone to get married without being present at the wedding ceremony. Simply signing the marriage schedule is inadequate.

The legal marriage ceremony should have some common wording. Not having these risks undermining the solemnity of the wedding ceremony and denying the seriousness of the commitment being made.

There is a large amount of flexibility as it is, so a few prescribed words that show that this is a marriage ceremony, with lifetime commitment is very reasonable.

A wedding is not just about the couple. The couple enter into a union which is understood by society and has been legally defined. Marriage is not a private matter.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

As noted above, marriage and its ceremony is a seriousness and solemnity act, albeit a happy occasion. A particular ceremony should not just be allowed because the couple wants it, but because it is appropriate for such a significant event.

As noted above, a wedding is a public declaration in which society and the state have an interest.

While the couple's and the guests dress can be themed, the ceremony itself should have common wording.

Recognising that they are being married in God's presence

Consultation Question 46:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The couple would be legally married at the civil wedding ceremony, but could have a religious service afterwards.

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The "open doors" requirement helps convey the public nature of wedding declarations and was introduced hundreds of years ago as a protection against forced marriage. This is still a problem in our society.

Removing the requirement encourages a false perception that marriage is a private matter without any public significance.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

A marriage ceremony is a serious and solemn act. Venues should not simply be allowed because marrying couples want them, but because they are appropriate places to hold such a significant ceremony.

Obviously, it is good to have wide variety of appropriate venues, for example, for churches who do not own their own building.

The 'safe and dignified' test for the venue needs to be clear.

Please share your views below:

How would venues be tested for “dignity” and “safety”. While the proposals call for guidance from the General Register Office, the terms need to be defined and stringent safeguards should be proposed.

Venues such natural surroundings (like forests, lakes, mountains etc.) lend themselves to engendering a sense of awe. MacDonalds would not, in my view.

Weddings should only be conducted in private homes if one person is terminally ill or has a disability preventing them from leaving their house.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

There seems too many points embedded in one question.

I don't mind point 1, that seems a formality, which obviously needs to be verified at some point, but it doesn't seem important to state that at the time of the wedding.

I don't agree with the rest of the points.

This change seems to open the door for any form of ceremony, which would trivialize the importance of marriage.

For me it's very important that the expression of will is expressed in front of the public audience, as marriage is an act in front of society and not just a private contract.

I don't mind

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Weddings are a public ceremony, and should not be trivialized. If the spouses want to have an eccentric party to celebrate that's their choice, but the actual ceremony should not become a circus

My wife and I hesitated before committing to marriage not so much because of the legal barriers but in respect for deeply held Christian belief that marriage is an exclusive and lifelong commitment between a man and a woman. Its is a serious commitment: not just a legally binding contract but also a way of honouring God our Creator. Marriage and family life is a building block for the rest of the community and the nation.

Consultation Question 3:

Please share your views below:

As a [REDACTED] vicar, I was due to provide pastoral care and conduct weddings for ten couples in 2020 but gradually every couple decided to postpone until 2021. This is understandable because of the health risk but the way the Government insisted on locking church doors during March to June was "over the top". Their constantly changing rules and over-use of lockdown has arguably caused more harm (mental and economic) than the virus itself!

Consultation Question 18:

Anglican preliminaries should continue to be recognised as legal preliminaries to weddings officiated by the Church of England and the Church in Wales;
or

Please expand on your answer:

Anglican preliminaries ensure that marriage is understood as an exclusive and lifelong commitment between a man and a woman. Preliminaries also ensure the couple understand this is a serious commitment: not just a legally binding contract but also a way of honouring God our Creator. Marriage and family life is a building block for the rest of the community and the nation.

Please expand on your answer:

20 members is far too small. This means a weird cult would be able to perform a ceremony which could trivialise marriage and fail to recognise that marriage is traditionally an exclusive and lifelong commitment between a man and a woman. Its is a serious commitment: not just a legally binding contract but also a way of honouring God our Creator. Marriage and family life is a building block for the rest of the community and the nation.

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

This proposal risks trivialising marriage which is an exclusive and lifelong commitment between a man and a woman. Its is a serious commitment: not just a legally binding contract but also a way of honouring God our Creator. Marriage and family life is a building block for the rest of the community and the nation.

The Church has a long list of relatives who must not marry to avoid incest and propagation of defective genetic material. These requirements should be maintained and respected.

Marriage is about joining community and not just the couple doing thrown thing. Therefore, the order of service must reflect the community's beliefs about what the word "marriage" actually means.

The existing CofE service has certain fixed items but plenty of scope for personalising as well.

The couple must be physically present and not just casually signing papers remotely.

Its is a serious commitment: not just a legally binding contract but also a way of honouring God our Creator. Marriage and family life is a building block for the rest of the community and the nation.

Marriage is not a theatrical fantasy (a vicar friend once had a couple turn up as Robin Hood and Maid Marion) but is about commitment as real people to a serious relationship to be lived out in the context of the home community.

Consultation Question 45:

No

Please expand on your answer:

It takes years of training for a CofE vicar to conduct a Christian wedding ceremony and I've seen too many secular officiants messing up funerals by a "mix and match" approach. We really don't want this in weddings as well.

Please share your views below:

None! If couples want religion they should go to a religious building and have an ordained leader perform the ceremony so that its done decently an in order.

Consultation Question 46:

No

Chapter 6: The wedding ceremony

Consultation Question 42:

No

Please expand on your answer:

A wedding is a sacred and special occasion. These measures undermine its solemnity and seriousness. Oral vows should always be given. The new measures permit someone to be married without even being present! This is ridiculous.

Consultation Question 43:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Permitting people to devise their own ceremony and wording with no restriction undermines the idea that a marriage is a long-term and binding arrangement. It is not very much to ask that some specific phrases are used to show that both people freely consent to the lifetime commitment they are entering into.

Consultation Question 47:

No

Please expand on your answer:

The “open doors” requirement helps convey the public nature of wedding declarations.

The open doors requirement was introduced hundreds of years ago as a protection against forced marriage. This is still a problem in our society. Removing the requirement encourages a false perception that marriage is a private matter without any public significance.

Chapter 7: Location

Consultation Question 48:

No

Please expand on your answer:

Venues should not simply be allowed because marrying couples want them, but because they are appropriate places to hold such a significant ceremony.

Please share your views below:

Unofficial wedding ceremonies have taken place in an S&M dungeon, underwater, and at a Comic Book convention with a couple dressed as comic book heroes. It would be completely incompatible with the dignity of marriage for venues like these to host legal weddings.
